RAILWAY STRIKE SITUATION MORE TENSE

WILSON CARRIES RAILWAY CRISIS TO THE CAPITOL

Brotherhoods Declare Only Surrender by Roads Or Congressional Action Can Avert Threatened Strike.

Washington, Aug. 26—With negotiations for averting the threatened railway strike practically at a deadlock, President Wilson today suddenly went to the capitol and conferred with administration leaders over the possibility of legislation.

The president conferred with Democratic Leader Kern and Chairman Newlands, of the interstate commerce commission, who, it was understood, after a canvass of the congressional situation, had concluded it was feasable to get through congress before adjournment as an amendment to the pending bill to increase the membership of the interstate commerce commission, some sort of an expression that the railways should be authorized to make rate increases to meet higher wages and to provide some sort of machinery for arbitration for similar disputes in the future, possibly along the lines of the Canadian commission.

Just before the president went to the capitol the brotherhood leaders, impatient at the delay of the railroad executives in replying to the president's last proposal, declared that only the unqualified concession of the eight-hour day or some action by congress to cause the government to operate the railroads could prevent the threatened strike.

On all hands the president's visit to the capitol was taken as indicating that the situation had reached a crisis. Late this afternoon the railroad executives were working on their communication to President Wilson. Among the railway executives it was said that any plan for legislation suggested by the president would have to be considered, but that the inclinations of the railway heads was to stand solidly on their demand for the arbitration of the present dispute.

When he finished conferring with Senators Kern and Newlands, President Wilson came to the door of his room and said to inquirers: "I came here on certain matters of legislation. That is all I can say now."

Late this afternoon the railroad executives adjourned without having finished their statement to President Wilson and their attitude was announced as unchanged.

After making the announcement President Wilson returned to the white house without conferring with any one else, and without making any further explanation of his visit. Senator Newlands stated positively that no joint session of congress had been arranged.

Washington, Aug. 26.—The threatened railway strike situation took on added tensity today as the railway executives continued their deliberations over the form of their counter proposal to President Wilson's plan and the brotherhood leaders silently awaited the next move.

The executives have been told that the men's leaders expect difficulty in restraining them after tonight.

The presidents worked steadily all morning and the forepart of the afternoon carefully phrasing their statement to President Wilson, but shortly afternoon had taken no final vote on it.

As has been outlined officially, it declines to concede the eight-hour day without arbitration and investigation of its application to railroading, but makes some concessions as to collateral issues.

The effect of the executives' counter proposal will be to pass the issue back to the brotherhoods and the outlook is variously described by those in touch with the negotiations.

CHILDREN UNDER 16 MUST BE KEPT IN

Health Officials Busy in Fight Against Infantile Paralysis Plague.

More stringent regulations were thrown around an effort to check infantile paralysis in Fort Wayne, Saturday.

Orders came from the board of health that all children under sixteen years be excluded from churches as well as Sunday schools. Children under 16 were forbidden in the market square area, and many persons called at the offices of the health board regarding certificates of health, advised taken out by those leaving the city.

Dr. J. H. Gilpin, secretary of the board of health, reported no new cases of the disease early Saturday. There are now six cases, all in check. Decision to disperse children under 16 from market square did not come until Saturday morning, when several patrons of the market complained of possible contagion.

Ministers Will Comply.

Ministers of the city have been notified regarding the attendance of children under 16 at church services. The orders of the health board will be immediately complied with.

While it is optional with parents to have their children examined, if they be under 16, before leaving the city, yet the health board strongly advises it. The family physician should make the examination and certify the results to Dr. Gilpin or Dr. Gilpin should be consulted for an examination. The health board suggests such a course to protect persons with children, who might be questioned by health officers in other cities regarding the physical condition of their children.

Get No Trace of Bandit Who Shot Woman Banker

Seymour, Ind., Aug. 26.—The search all night and early today for the bandit who shot and wounded Miss Nera Hunsucker, assistant cashier of the bank at Medora, when he demanded $5,000 from her yesterday afternoon, failed to disclose any trace of the man.

The bandit was thought to have been surrounded in a cornfield last night, but the posse of 500 men waited until daylight to venture into the field. The bandit was chased into the field after he had fired several shots at those who were in his way.

Miss Hunsucker was shot in the mouth. Her condition is not serious. The man made no attempt to take the money in the bank after he fired the shot.

Miss Hunsucker was removed to a hospital at Seymour and later was taken to her home at Vallonia. After she had been attended by a surgeon she was permitted to describe briefly her encounter with the bandit. He approached the cashier's window, where she was at work, she said, and immediately demanded $5,000.

Miss Hunsucker attempted to argue with the intruder, but when threatened with death pleaded with him not to shoot, but to take what money was in sight. At almost the instant she uttered her appeal the bandit fired, whether by accident or design is not known.

As the shot rang out the robber dashed from the bank and fled from the village before the few persons on the street could stop him. Pursuit was hurriedly organized and several persons caught sight of the fugitive before he entered the cornfield in which he took hiding.

The bandit is described as about 35 year sold, wearing a long tan coat and a soft hat. It is said he wore automobile goggles as he entered the bank, but he was unmasked when he approached the cashier's window.

Miss Hunsucker had been employed in the bank a number of years. She assisted her brother, J. L. Hunsucker, cashier, until his death in 1908 and continued her work under H. C. McCoun, the present cashier. McCoun had just begun his vacation and in his absence Miss Hunsucker was in charge of the bank.

FOE FLEET IS VICTOR

Helm's Defense Goes Down Before Invaders in the Naval War Game.

MYTHICAL INVADING ARMY IS LANDING

Tactics Make Long Island Shore Point of Landing of Enemies.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 26.—The defending squadron under Rear-Admiral Helm has been destroyed by the hostile fleet under Admiral Mayo in the navy war game and an invading army was being landed in theory on the shore of Long island this afternoon.

The "red" and "blue" fleets had been engaged in battle, the culmination of the navy war game, since 5 o'clock this morning off Scotland lightship, Sandy Hook. Up to noon, by the umpire's decision, the battleships Nevada and Texas and the destroyers Wadsworth and Tucker of the enemy fleet, the scout cruiser Birmingham and the destroyers Benham, Fanning, Balch, Drayton and several others of the "blue" defending fleet had been lost in action.

Many other vessels may have been constructively lost, but orders to the commanders of the two fleets were that ships regarded as sunk should proceed to port immediately and their arrival should not be reported. The battle was fought with every man of each ship's company at his proper station, but the firing was done with the small calibre batteries, employed in training turret crews. They are one-pounder guns mounted upon the twelve and fourteen-inch weapons of the main batteries so aranged that the sighting is done through the use of the mechanism of the big gun.

Umpires stationed on each ship judge the firing conditions and determine when

MOTORCYCLIST IS PAINFULLY INJURED

John Rosencrance is Hurt on Bass Road When He Hits Telephone Pole.

John Rosencrance, 2232 Hoagland avenue, was very painfully injured at 8 o'clock Saturday morning when he struck a telephone pole with his motorcycle on Deer Park avenue near the Bass farm. He was traveling at a rate of speed which made it impossible for him to make the turn. He slid into the ditch and then struck the telephone pole.

He struck the pole with his head and suffered a deep, long gash on his right leg. His knee cap was also badly hurt. The front of the motorcycle was badly damaged.

He was rendered unconscious and a man in an automobile who chanced to pass picked up the injured man. He took him as far as Runion avenue and Main street where he helped him to the sidewalk and continued his journey up Runion avenue.

Men on the corner helped the injured young man into a nearby store and called the police ambulance. He was taken to St. Joe hospital where his injuries were attended. Later in the morning he was removed to his home.

The young man was on his way to Tri-Lake where members of his family are spending the summer vacation.

CHARGE FRENCH WITH MERCILESS CRUELTY

Exterminate All Germans in Captured Trenches Says Berlin.

Berlin, Aug. 26.—The charge that the French have an organized force whose duty it is to exterminate all the Germans found in captured trenches, is made in a statement issued today by the Overseas news agency as follows:

"The French some time ago added a new fighting system which is the most cowardly and flagrant violation of the laws of war developed up to this time. Coincident reports confirm the fact, not known until now, that wthin companies, special detachments have been formed with express orders to remain behind in captured treinches and exterminate all Germans yet alive. These troops are called 'nettoyeurs,' (cleaners or sweepers.)

"When the French storming columns succeed in crossing a trench the 'nettoyeurs' enter and start the work of cleaning the trenches of all the living. Hand grenades are thrown in the dugouts where there are often wounded men. Those who escape from the hand grenades are killed by revolver and knife when they attempt to come out. This terrible slaughter is continued from man to man. Every man whether wounded or not, armed or not, is mercilessly stabbed or shot."

HUGHES TO SPEAK HERE THIS FALL

Republican Candidate for Presidency Coming Probably Late in September

Charles E. Hughes, republican candidate for president, will speak in Fort Wayne probably late in September or the forepart of October. Announcement to this effect has been made by Jesse Eschbach, chairman of the republican bureau of speakers for Indiana.

For some time District Chairman Harry G. Hogan has been making an effort to secure the presidential candidate and assurance that he is coming has caused general rejoicing among the republicans of the district. Mr. Eschbach, of the republican bureau of speakers, says he has the assurances of the national speakers' bureau that Hughes will come to Indiana, which will be one of the principal battlegrounds of the campaign.

Mr. Hughes' visit to Fort Wayne will be the occasion for a big demonstration and as soon as the date is known to a certainty preparations will be made for the meeting. Judging from the number of meetings that both the democrats and republicans are planning to hold here the Twelfth congressional district will be Indiana's principal battlefield.

93 ALONE LEFT FROM $14,000,000 FORTUNE.

New York, Aug. 26.—Patrick Calhoun, grandson of the famous statesman and prominently identified with the San Francisco street car system until a few years ago, testified in a receivership proceeding here that five dollars was the only tangible asset remaining of a fortune of $14,000,000 possessed by him five years ago. The proceedings became known today. Financial reverses following the earthquake and fire in San Francisco were responsible for his losses, he asserted. Receivership proceedings were brought against Calhoun in a suit for office rent.

GERMANS RUSH THE FIGHTING

Strike Blow in Champagne While Resisting Somme Advance of Allies.

DRIVE ON VERDUN AT THE SAME TIME

Today's War News Given in Summary

While determinedly resisting the allied advance on the Somme front in northern France the Germans are launching strong attacks in other sectors of the western battle line, the latest of which movements reported being in the Champagne region. Near Tahure in the Champagne the scene of some of the hardest fighting in the French offensive of last September, German troops last night charged French positions and succeeded in penetrating them. Subsequently they were driven out, Paris declares. This attack followed quickly upon an assault by the Germans on the position southeast of Verdun, which the French repulsed by a counter attack, and was carried out simultaneously with attacks in the region of Verdun itself and along the Somme front.

The point selected for the Verdun offensive was between Fleury and Thiaumont, where the French scored their recent advance. The Germans, although they subjected the French lines to a heavy bombardment, were unable to make any gain, according to Paris. On the Somme the German counter-thrust was directed at hill 121, near Maurepos, past which village the French have hammered their way in attempts to envelope Clery and clear the road north of the river to Peronne. This attack also was repulsed, the Paris bulletin declares.

Military activity is developing in the Balkans. Sofia reports an important victory over the Servians on the Bulgarian right wing and announces that on the other flank the Bulgarians have reached the Greek Ægean coast.

Balkan political developments are being followed with intense interest, particularly the attitude of Roumania. Dispatches today indicate further military preparations by this kingdom, including an increase of the extraordinary credit for the army of 200,000,000 francs.

Vienna claims the checking of Russian attempts to advance in the Carpathians toward the Hungarian border, but Petrograd asserts that further gains in this region have been made by the Russians.

The British admiralty announces the torpedoing of a British naval auxiliary in the North sea, including the loss of twenty-three men.

Paris, Aug. 26.—(Noon.)—After an intense bombardment last night the Germans launched an infantry attack west of Tahur in the Champagne. They penetrated the French position, the war office announced today, but subsequently were expelled. German attacks on the Somme and Verdun fronts were repulsed.

The German attack on the Somme front was made at hill 121, near the town of Maurepas, recently captured by the French. On the Verdun front east of the Mouse the Germans attacked the French line between Fleury and Thiau-

FRANK THEURE HIT BY AUTO AND INJURED

Frank Theure, aged 36 years residing at 203 East Superior street, was struck by an automobile owned and driven by John Hey, 858 Killea avenue, at 10:30 o'clock Saturday morning at Clinton and Berry streets. He was taken to St. Joseph's hospital in the police ambulance, where it was found that his injuries consisted of several bad bruises and a deep cut on his head. The attending physician states that the skull is not fractured.

According to witnesses the automobile driver was not to blame, as Mr. Theure stepped directly in front of the machine, which is said to have been traveling very slowly.

WILL BEGIN WORK OF RECRUITING SOON

Second lieutenant Howard Miller, of company E, First Indiana infantry, who was detailed to Fort Banjamin Harrison, arrived in Fort Wayne with three assistants, Friday evening, and announces that he will begin work of recruiting the first of next week. His asisstants are Sergeant Leroy Likens, of Auburn; Corporal Allen Ralston, of Michigan City, and Private Patsy Pirchio.

Saturday was spent in securing quarters for his assistants and seeking a good location for the recruiting office. It is very likely that the offices in the Swinney block will be secured, but no decision was reached Saturday.

Recruiting will not only be done in Fort Wayne, but also in surrounding towns and cities.

FIRE CHIEF FINDS OIL SOAKED WASTE

Fire Chief Henry Hilbrecht, while investigating the origin of the fire which damaged the plant of the Central foundry on East Wayne street Thursday night, discovered a quantity of oil-soaked and charred waste at the origin of the fire. This find strengthens the suspicion that the blaze was of incendiary origin.

The fire chief is of the opinion that the waste was taken from journal boxes on railroad cars. There are a number of sidetracks near the plant and scraps of waste were found, indicating that the firebug had approached from the west, dropping bits of waste as he walked along.

Detective Sergt. Walter Immel has been assigned to the case, but thus far no further clew has been found.

A sample of the waste was sent to the office of the state fire marshal, as well as all the information regarding the fire.

PARIS COURT DEAF TO WOMAN SPY'S APPEAL

Berlin Version of Execution of German Woman by the French.

Berlin, Aug. 26.—"In Marseilles on Aug. 22 a woman named Pfaat, twenty-eight years old, was shot as a spy," says the Overseas news agency. "She had appealed against the death sentence of the court martial at Marseilles but the Paris court of appeals rejected her plea.

"The Cologne Gazette states this is not the first case in which the French have put a woman to death during the war. It recalls the agitation of the English and French press in regard to the case of Miss Edith Cavell, whose execution for high treason and continued spying caused these newspapers to express indignation. The Cologne Gazette asks whether the same ideas will hold good now that a German woman has been put to death by the French."

A Marseilles dispatch of Aug. 22 told of the execution of Felice Pfaat as a spy.

The charge against Miss Edith Cavell, who was put to death in Brussels last fall, was given in dispatches at that time as having assisted British, French and Belgians to escape from Belgium.

WANTS ALL CLOCKS ADVANCED AN HOUR

Pittsburg, Pa., Aug. 26.—A movement to conserve one hour of sunshine every day in the year for every man, woman and child in the United States was announced today by the executive committee of the Pittsburg chamber of commerce which will carry the matter to the United States chamber of commerce with the plea that it be submitted to a referendum of the 250,000 business men who compose that body. The plan is to have clocks throughout the country advanced one hour, thus allowing everybody to begin the working day an hour earlier and quit an hour earlier. As all sections would be affected, the system, the chamber argues, would not interfere with time regulation as provided by the four zones of standard time.

Chicago Millionaire, Shipwrecked In Far North, Rescued by McCulloch

The vessel was a total loss, but the entire party landed safely on St. Matthew's island, where they were found yesterday by the McCulloch.

The members of the party aboard the Great Bear were able to land tents and provisions on St. Matthew's island and lived comfortably 15 days until the McCulloch, which had been sent from Nome to search for the vessel, found them.

Mr. Borden and his entire party were taken aboard the McCulloch, which started back to Nome last night.

SHARK SHOW NOW IN A NEW YORK MUSEUM

New York, Aug. 26.—To satisfy the extraordinary interest in sharks due to the appearance of the fish in large numbers on the north Atlantic coast this summer and the death of three bathers from this cause, the American museum of natural history today opened a special exhibit showing a man-eater, a blue shark and a ground shark.

"All sharks which have been captured around here since the shark scare," said J. H. Nichols, assistant curator of the museum, who staged the exhibit, "have been undoubtedly this common ground shark."

Visitors to the exhibition are greeted by the following printed notice: "The danger of being attacked by a shark about here is probably less than that of being struck by lightning."

Mr. and Mrs. Willis Hattersley have returned from a trip to points on the Great Lakes.

In Hysterics Mrs. Adams Declares Her Course Was Justified.

Macon, Ga., Aug. 26.—Accompanied by a military escort, the body of Capt. Edgar J. Spratling, F company, Fifth regiment, national guard of Georgia, who was shot and killed at the state mobilization camp here yesterday by Mrs. H. C. Adams, of Atlanta, early today was taken to his home in Atlanta. Burial will be at Opelika, Ala. Mrs. Adams, formerly a patient of Captain Spratling, who in civil life was a physician, last night was held by a coroner's jury for the killing.

In the Bibb county jail here she asserted she shot Captain Spratling because of attentions paid her while she was in his office at Atlanta. After several hours in jail Mrs. Adams became hysterical, but frequently declared that when she goes to trial her course will be shown to have been justified. Her husband, a laundry wagon driver, is expected here today. Mrs. Maud Monk, a trained nurse, questioned by officers of the national guard at Camp Harris last night, is said to have declared she saw a letter to Captain Spratling from Mrs. Adams threatening to kill him if he did not see her.

Officers at the camp indicated a belief that illness due to nervous disorders caused Mrs. Adams to think Captain Spratling had acted improperly to her.

Greek Fort Captured.

The Bulgarians have attacked and captured the Greek fort of Startila, after killing its commander, Changas, and the entire garrison, which offered spirited resistance, says a Saloniki dispatch to the Matin. The dispatch is dated Aug. 23 and was delayed.

A dispatch from Avlona today states that the Italians have occupied Porto Palermo and the summit of Mount Kalarat, in southern Albania, in order to watch the Albanian coast, north of Cape Kephali, fifty miles southeast of Avlona, in which district there is said to be an Austrian submarine base.

The territory occupied by the Italians is quasi-Greek. The opinion of Rome newspapers, however, is that Greece will not protest the occupation.

HOLDS PROTEST MEETING

Saloniki Objects to Occupation of Greek Territory by Bulgars.

Saloniki, Aug. 26.—Via Paris, 5:55 a. m.)—A large popular meeting was held here last night to protest against the occupation of Greek territory by Bulgarians. That was followed by a demonstration for Venizelos and the singing of the national hymn. The crowd then marched to the headquarters of Gen. Sarrail entente commander, and sang the "Marseillaise." A formal protest against the Bulgarian occupation was drawn up and left with the prefect of police. Dispatches from Athens say the government is much concerned about the liberal party manifestation which is being organized for Sunday and threatens to hold counter demonstration of supporters of the king.

SERBIANS MEET DEFEAT.

Beaten by Bulgarians After Eighteen Consecutive Attacks.

Sofia, Aug. 26.—(Via London.)—After severe fighting on the Bulgarian right wing on the Macedonian front the Serbians have been defeated with very heavy losses and compelled to retire, the war office announced today. Eighteen consecutive attacks were made by the Serbians.

On the eastern end of the front Bulgarian forces have reached the Greek Aegean coast and put British cavalry detachments to flight. Several villages have been occupied by the Bulgarians.

BRITISH CRAFT SUNK; 23 DEAD.

Naval Auxiliary Sent Down by Germans in North Sea.

London, Aug. 26.—The torpedoing in the North sea of a British naval auxiliary, with the loss of 23 men, was announced officially today.

Eighty-seven men were saved. The torpedoed vessel was the armed boarding steamer Duke of Albany.

The Stifts-Tidende, of Ribe, Denmark, is quoted in a Reuter dispatch from Copenhagen, as saying the commander of the submarine which sank the Lusitania was Captain Max Valentine, son of the dean of Sondersburg cathedral. Captain Valentine, the newspaper says, has been decorated with a number of orders since the sinking of the liner, including the Iron Cross of the first class and the Hohenzollern house order with swords, a special distinction which is the personal gift of the German emperor.

British aeroplanes have made another dash over Belgium, on this occasion penetrating to the vicinity of Namur, 46 miles southeast of Brussels and bombarding German air sheds. One aeroplane is missing. An official account of these operations issued today says: "Early Friday morning an attack was carried out by naval aeroplanes upon enemy airship sheds near Amur. Sheds were successfully bombarded and two of them were hits, but due to low lying clouds it was not possible to observe the damage done. One machine failed to return."

A heavy attack made by the Prussian guard against British positions at Thiepval, on the Somme front, was repulsed by the Worcestershire and Wiltshire regiments, it was officially announced this afternoon.

DRIVE AUSTRIANS BACK.

Petrograd, Aug. 26.—In the foothills of the Carpathians, in Galicia, the Russians have pressed back Austrian forces and occupied the village of Guta and reached the sources of the rivers Bystritza and Bystritza-Nadvorna, in the region of Rafalov, according to an official announcement.

The Russians are pressing the advantage recently gained over the Turks in southern Turkish Armenia and report the continued flight of what remains of the Turkish fourth division, defeated in the recent fighting. After capturing Mush the Russians kept on and occupied a ridge beyond the town.

REJECTED KAISER'S AGENT.

King Ferdinand Says Proposed Visit Would Be Inopportune.

Paris, Aug. 26.—According to information from diplomatic sources, says a wireless dispatch from Berne, Emperor William of Germany wrote to King Ferdinand of Roumania that he intended to send Duke Albrecht of Mecklenburg on a special mission to him with regard to the position of Roumania.

King Ferdinand replied, adds the dispatch, that the mission would be inopportune because as a constitutional monarch he would be obliged to refer the envoy to his ministers and in the circumstances he preferred that any communication from the German government should be received through ordinary diplomatic channels.

GERMANS REPULSE FRENCH.

Berlin, Aug. 26.—Attacks last night by the British in the Thiepval and Foureaux wood sectors on the Somme front and by the French near Maurepas were repulsed, the war office announced today. In the Champagne, northwest of Tahure, French trenches were raided and 46 prisoners captured.

POWERS EXCHANGE VIEWS.

Athens, Aug. 26.—The present political and military situation, says the Patris, has resulted in an exchange of views among the entente powers regarding the attitude to be taken towards Greece. It is questioned by entente diplomatists, the newspaper state, wether the measures agreed to by Greece in response to the demands of the allies, including demobilization of the army and a government offering, all necessary guarantees for benevolent neutrality, are now sufficient, in view of the new situation.

CLOSE LEASE FOR RANDALL

has no plans for the future. He will probably remain at the Randall for a short time to assist the new managers.

Because of Mrs. Randall's multitude of activities she could not devote as much time to the hotel as she thought she should, and for that reason consented to the leasing of it. The hotel has never done a better business and is now in a most thriving condition.

Experienced Hotel Men.

Messrs. Hassinger and Bonine are both experienced hotel men and come to Fort Wayne highly recommended. They have a wide acquaintance among the traveling public and plan to make the Randall one of the most popular hotels in northern Indiana.

The Randall hotel is one of the pioneer institutions of Fort Wayne. There are men on the road who would stop nowhere else. They have been stopping there for years. The hotel is located on Harrison street at the head of Columbia street.

Another Lease Closed.

Glassman & Kopp, of Cleveland, dealers in raincoats, umbrellas and similar articles, closed a five-year lease Saturday morning for the business room at 1512 South Calhoun street belonging to Don Dondero. Messrs. Glassman & Kopp expect to open a store here on Sept. 10. The property was leased through Joe Goldstine, local real estate dealer.

TRAILING NEW TYPE OF WHITE SLAVERY

New York, Aug. 26.—District Attorney Swann announced today that he had assigned one of his assistants to make a special investigation of evidence that manufacturers here are employing women to attract buyers who come to New York from all parts of the country. The district attorney's office has been engaged lately in an effort to stamp out the practice of "white slavery." Mr. Swann said that he had unearthed enough facts to convince him that men who induce women to meet buyers may be indicted as white slavers. The district attorney's attention was called to this alleged practice among certain manufacturers by the formal complaint made by one business man against another, charging him with having enticed the complainant's wife into an evil life.

Some of the railways' executives say their proposition is positively their last; some of the men's leaders stand firmly against arbitration. Others on both sides have hopes that out of it will come further negotiations delaying a strike and possibly averting it.

Statement Is Significant.

A statement issued by the federal board of mediation today on the settlements it had conducted was regarded as significant. It described a report about to be made to the senate which will disclose that in every case of settlements conducted under the old Erdman act or the later Newlands law, substantial advantages have been won by the employes through arbitration.

The only instance recorded where the men did not benefit was a settlement made without the participation of the federal mediators.

Serious But Not Hopeless.

President Wilson regards the situation as serious but has not given up hope of a settlement.

No word in regard to the situation having arrived, employes' meeting adjourned shortly after noon until 2 o'clock. Meanwhile the presidents of the four brotherhoods remained at their hotel awaiting a summons from the white house. They were without official knowledge of the railroad heads' position.

Crisis Believed at Hand.

The crisis appeared imminent today while the railroad presidents prepared a counter-proposal for final submission to President Wilson.

On the acceptability of this proposal by the railway brotherhoods' committee of 640 depended largely whether the presidents' personal efforts to mediate shall fail. Heretofore the brotherhood leaders have stood firmly against any plan to arbitrate their demand for an eight hour day as a basis in determining wages.

The railroad executives met early today to perfect the draft of their proposal, and were expected to send it immediately to President Wilson who had an engagement with the brotherhood leaders about noon.

Rail Presidents' Contention.

The railroad presidents contend for arbitration on the ground that a basic eight hour day, sought by the brotherhoods, is actually a question of wages rather than of working hours, and consequently is properly subject to arbitration. Further they propose that if the arbitration board which might be the interstate commerce commission or some other public body to be created, finds wage increases should be granted, the order would be considered effective from the time arbitration begins and a fund would be established by the railroads to insure such back payments. The employes would be bound not to make further demands nor to strike pending negotiations.

The proposal would amount to a partial rejection of President Wilson's plan whereby the railroads were to concede the eight hour day and all other questions in dispute were to be arbitrated. Some members of the brotherhood committee, although still hostile to arbitrating the eight hour day demand, were said to favor taking the railroads' proposal under advisement and continuing negotiations next week.

In Continuous Session.

Brotherhood leaders had received no official advices regarding the railroad presidents' proposition when the regular daily meeting of the employes' committee convened. The workmen's committee planned to remain in continuous session until they heard from President Wilson, who had promised them some word by noon. The four brotherhood heads went into secret session early this morning to consider the official report of the railroads' position, which they had obtained from newspapers. They had received no word from the white house and did not expect to confer with the president, they said, until after he had received a delegation from the railroad representatives.

Opinion was divided among the employes as to how the railroads' proposal would be received. None of them thought that it would be accepted without qualification, and a large number of them declared that if the railroads continued to insist upon arbitration a strike inevitably would follow. Many of the men still were desirous of leaving for their homes tonight and had made every preparation to do so. A suggestion frequently heard was that the committee of 640 be permitted to go home immediately and the negotiations be left entirely in the hands of the brotherhood heads. The railway executives went into session at 10 o'clock to take final action on the proposal they will submit to President Wilson. Since the executives determined upon the nature of their proposal and drafted their reply last night, the committee of eight has gone over and smoothed down the wording of the letter to the president. In their meeting this morning the railway executives will merely approve the committee's final draft, which then will be submitted to President Wilson.

EMINENT CHURCHMAN IS DEAD AT PEORIA

Archbishop Spalding, Weakened by Heat Wave, Has Passed Away.

Peoria, Ill., Aug. 26.—Archbishop John Lancaster Spalding, noted prelate of the Roman Catholic church in Illinois and a resident of Peoria continuously since 1877, when he was chosen for the position of bishop of the newly created Peoria diocese, died at his residence here yesterday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock.

He had been ill for a number of years, having suffered a paralytic stroke in 1906.

Members of the archbishop's family, summoned to his bedside a week ago, were in the room when he breathed his last.

The mind of the prelate remained clear up to within twelve hours of his death. No pain whatsoever was evident at any time during the last illness. His condition was borne with fortitude, and his every thought was for the welfare of the church and of the many parishioners in this city and in the diocese over which he presided for years.

Physicians in attendance report that the recent heat wave left the aged prelate in a weakened condition, and his decline was rapid.

Funeral on Tuesday.

The funeral of the archbishop will be held on Tuesday at 10 a. m., in the St. Mary's Cathedral, over which he presided for years. It is expected that Cardinal Gibbons of Baltimore, will attend.

Bishop Spalding was born in Lebanon, Ky., June 2, 1840. He was educated at Mount St. Mary's college, Cincinnati, Ohio, and then he went to Louvain, Belgium, where he received his degree of doctor of divinity in 1863. After being ordained he went to Rome for a special course of study in the Belgian college and in 1865 returned to the United States prepared for his life's work.

He was assigned to the Cathedral at Louisville, Ky., and in addition to missionary duties, he acted as secretary to Bishop Lavialle. He remained in Louisville until 1869 when at his own request he was charged with founding a parish for negroes. Before he left Louisville in 1872 he had built and paid for a church and parish house for Roman Catholic negroes.

He moved to New York shortly after the death of his uncle, the Most Reverend M. J. Spalding, the archbishop of Baltimore, and devoted several years to writing a biography of that prelate. He served as an assistant priest at St. Michael's church, New York, for several years and while in this position was appointed bishop of Peoria.

The Peoria diocese under Bishop Spalding's direction grew from fifty-one to 250 churches.

ADAIR COMES RIGHT BACK AT GOODRICH

Democratic Nominee Makes Prompt Answer to G. O. P. Keynote.

Sullivan, Ind., Aug. 26.—John A. M. Adair opened the democratic campaign in Sullivan county yesterday as the principal speaker at the Merom chautauqua on democratic day before a crowd of 5,500 persons. The first part of his address was devoted entirely to answering the speech of James P. Goodrich at Greencastle Thursday night, which opened the republican campaign in the state.

Adair objected to what he called the inconsistency of Goodrich's complaint that the democratic party had created new offices, when at the same time, in answer to Adair's recent addresses, he admitted he would not repeal a single one of the laws passed during the Ralston administration. Adair declared that as long as the republican nominee for governor refuses to stand for repeal of these laws he has no right to complain on general lines, failing to specify what particular portion he would do away with.

Fails to Give Credit.

"He fails to point out the real effective work of the administration and talks long and loud about extravagance, but does not point out wherein it lies," Adair said. "He spoke of the increased cost of the maintenance of the state institutions, but was not fair enough to tell his auditors that the number of state institutions now cared for is more than 40 per cent greater than under the Hanly administration.

"We democrats take it as the highest recommendation that Goodrich shows that the increased cost of maintaining these institutions only amounts to 25.9 per cent, while the number of institutions has increased more than 49 per cent. I shall be glad if he makes that statement in every one of his speeches in Indiana.

Increase Held Justified.

"At a later date I will go into detail and show fully and completely how my friend Mr. Goodrich has sought to cover up the fact that, through efficiency and economy of the present democratic administration, the debt of the state has been entirely paid off, our institutions placed upon an economical basis and the affairs of the state generally managed better than ever before. He should know that wages have increased and food products are higher, and he ought to be fair enough to admit that expenditures would naturally be higher. It is just as unfair to undertake to mislead by covering up a part of the truth as it is to specifically state an untruth. The fact remains that the democratic party in Indiana has made good from every standpoint."

FIRMLY BELIEVES CROCKERLAND REAL

Admiral Peary is Confident of Existence of Far North Region.

Washington, Aug. 26.—Rear Admiral Robert E. Peary reiterates his confidence in the existence of Crockerland, and his belief that he saw it in July, 1906. The admiral's statement, telegraphed to the Tribune from his summer place in Maine, was called forth by the fact that Ensign Fitzhugh Green, the naval officer, assigned to the MacMillan Crockerland Arctic expedition, made no report of whether the expedition found Crockerland in announcing to the navy department his safe arrival at Copenhagen on Aug. 19. After quoting from his original narrative of his expedition the story of his first view of what he believed to be Crockerland, Admiral Peary said:

"It may be that McMillan and I were both misled by the nearly permanent clouds of condensation over persistent lanes of water, or unusual refraction which occurs in the Arctic regions, may have lifted into view land that was in reality well below the horizon, and my estimate of the distance of Crockerland may have been too moderate. It will be well to await the completion of Stefansson's discoveries before dismissing Crockerland."

ENTIRE CITY PUT IN FEAR BY MYSTERIOUS NOTES AND ATTACKS AT EAST LIVERPOOL, OHIO.

At left, Mrs. Irma Little; at right, Mrs. Florence Anderson, victims of attacks by the mysterious note writers, and copies of notes they received.

East Liverpool, O., Aug. 23.—Residents of East Liverpool are keeping their doors locked even when they are inside their own homes as a result of the mysterious sending of threats and attacks on two women.

Strangers in the city and loungers are looked upon with suspicion, especially by women, each of whom fears she may be the next victim of the mysterious person or persons sending letters threatening violence.

A terse warning, scribbled on a scrap of paper and unsigned, is the herald of the person who has terrified the city—a person so far unknown to the police.

"We'll get you tonight," read a note received by Mrs. Irma Little. Not long afterward a man knocked at the door of her apartment and threw a phial of acid at Mrs. Little when she opened the door. She shielded her face, but her arms were burned.

"We'll get you tonight," read a note thrust into the home of Mrs. Florence Anderson. An hour later Mrs. Anderson was attacked by a man in the basement of her home.

Previously Mrs. Anderson had received a threat and a police guard was placed about her house. When nothing happened the guard was withdrawn. The same day the second note was received and the attack occurred.

Mrs. Little has received three notes since the attempt to throw acid into her face. The first read: "I'll get your pretty face next time." The second read: "I'll get you yet," and the third: "You will not smile with your eyes much longer."

On account of the difference in the methods of attack on the two women and the mention of "we" in the notes, the police believe more than one man is terrorizing the women of the city.

The police are following every clue and guarding the home of Mrs. Anderson. The home of Mrs. Little will be guarded also when she returns from Atlantic City, where she fled after receiving the last note.

Mrs. Little is wife of the owner of a large office building; Mrs. Anderson is the wife of the secretary of a clothing firm.

Mrs. Little's father, Charles Saylers, a contractor, says he believes the attack on his daughter was meant to wreak vengeance on him, but he is unable to assign any reason for such vengeance.

Saylers has offered a reward of $500 for capture of his daughter's assailant.

NEWS OF FORT WAYNE'S NEIGHBORS

BRINGS BIG SUIT.

Florence Watson Demands $10,000 Damages from Winona Assembly.

Warsaw, Ind., Aug. 26.—A lawsuit which promises to develop into an unusually bitter legal fight was filed in the circuit court when Florence Watson, a resident of Winona Lake, brought suit against the Winona Assembly and Bible Conference for $10,000 damages.

In her complaint she maintains that in spite of the fact that Winona Lake is an incorporated town and maintains a United States postoffice she is being denied the liberties of a resident of an incorporated town and also that her business has been practically ruined by the officers of the association.

A fence is maintained around the town and guards are stationed at the entrance and exits, denying anyone egress or ingress unless he has a ticket the price of which ranges from 25 cents for a single admission to $5 for a season ticket.

The plaintiff charges that on July 3 she purchased a season ticket for $5 and because she refused to give the association 5 per cent of her gross earnings from her rooming and boarding house, as required by the association, her ticket was forcibly taken from her.

L. M. SHELDON IS DEAD.

Churubusco, Ind., Aug. 26.—Lawrence M. Mr. Sheldon was born in Allen county, December 11, 1885, and resided on the farm of his parents his entire life. Mr. Sheldon was a member of the U. B. church of Churubusco and a faithful member of the Excelsior class of that congregation. He leaves his parents, a half-sister, Mrs. Ada McBride of Allen county, three brothers, Mont, Floyd and Frank, at home. The funeral occurs Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the U. CRUELTY IS CHARGED

Decatur, Ind., Aug. 26.—Mrs. Jessie A. Miller has filed her petition in the circuit court, asking that she be divorced from William H. Miller, a well known farmer of Wabash township. According to the allegations of the petition, the couple were married on August 25, 1895, and their separation took place on Aug. 17, 1916, after a married life of about 21 years. The usual allegations of residence are also made. Cruel and inhuman treatment are the only grounds alleged in the complaint for the decree asked. The complaint is long and specifically sets out many instances, alleged to support the general allegation.

Bluffton, Ind., Aug. 26.—Relatives of Macy DeWees, and officers who have been assisting in efforts to find some trace of him, reported today that they had no information concerning his disappearance, and no reasons have been advanced as to the cause of his disappearance other than the theory that worry over financial reverses caused him to decide to

The child was caught under the wheels of a wagon loaded with baled straw or became entangled in one of the wheels and suffered a fracture of the left leg and a fracture of the bones of the left arm. The arm was split open from the shoulder to the wrist and the bones were crushed. A party of children were the only eye witnesses and what actually transpired is not clear to them.

CHANGE OF VENUE GRANTED.

Auburn, Ind., Aug. 26.—The divorce case of Walter Lee Noragon against Laura Noragon was called Friday. The parties in the action are Butler people. On account of Judge Link giving counsel to one of the parties in this action he was disqualified to sit in the case and appointed P. V. Hoffman to act as special judge. She lived in this county the past fifty-four years, being long a resident of Pleasant township.

HUNTINGTON MAN HURT

Huntington, Ind., Aug. 26.—Forest Hughes, of the Home Furniture store, was painfully injured Friday when the furniture delivery truck and a car driven by Varley Bradford, of Grant county, collided at the cross roads on the Marion road near Thompson's saw mill. Bradford was coming from the west and Hughes was going south.

BURNED BY GASOLINE.

Bluffton, Ind., Aug. 26.—Romain Destatte, a barber at the Charles Vanhorn shop, on South Johnson street, was called home to Pennville late Thursday afternoon by a message that his wife had been badly burned by gasoline. DIAMOND PIN STOLEN.

Bluffton, Ind., Aug. 26.—Gus Durst was the victim of thieves last evening, who made away with a diamond scarf pin valued at $75. He was returning home from the Marion fair and because of the crowd on the late car arriving in this city on the M. & B. he was forced to stand in the aisle. The pin was in his tie and attracted some attention. Three young fellows, who were standing near him, were pushing each other and at times they surrounded Durst. He did not notice them remove the pin, but he is of the opinion that they are the guilty ones.

Columbia City, Ind., Aug. 26.—Della Julian has filed suit against her husband, Walter Julian, for divorce. She states that they were married November 9, 1910, and lived as husband and wife until August 1, 1916, at which time he left her without support and away from relatives and departed for parts unknown to her. She alleges that before leaving he sold off their chickens and other possessions and then left her to provide for herself. Besides this, she accuses him of cruel and inhuman treatment.

NOTICE TO CITY WATER CONSUMERS.

Beginning Aug. 28, 1916, we will deliver current water bills which will become delinquent twenty (20) days after date of delivery.

Please do not fail to bring water bill with you and pay at new "Cashier's Window" in lobby.

Meters will be read every three (3) months, June, September, December and March, and bills will be rendered quarterly to consumers using more than the minimum. This is done in the interest of consumers and by so doing, any leaks appearing will be discovered early, thus preventing high water bills.

The minimum rate is Four Dollars ($4.00) per year and this permits the use of 14½ cubic feet (109 gals.) per day without extra cost.

All meters register in cubic feet, and bills are now figured in cubic feet. A cubic foot of water contains seven and one half (7½) gallons.

This department earnestly requests all consumers to read carefully information appearing on new "Water Bill" and co-operate with us by complying with same, to the mutual good of this big, essential city utility.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS FOR THE HOME

Ephesians 4:17-32.

17. This I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind.
18. Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart:
19. Who being past feeling have given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness.
20. But ye have not so learned Christ;
21. If so be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus:
22. That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts;
23. And be renewed in the spirit of your mind;
24. And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness.
25. Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbor: for we are members one of another.
26. Be ye angry, and sin not: let not the sun go down upon your wrath:
27. Neither give place to the devil.
28. Let him that stole steal no more: but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth.
29. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers.
30. And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption.
31. Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice:
32. And be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.

Berlin's Welcome to Koenig.

Berlin dispatches have graphically described the royal greeting given to Capt. Paul Koenig and his men of the merchant submarine Deutschland, on their arrival in Bremen on their successful return from the first trip of the big U-boat to American shores. The city was gaily bedecked with flags and other patriotic emblems and cheering throngs lined the banks of the Weser as the Deutschland steamed slowly up to its docks. Kaiser Wilhelm has sent his warmest congratulations to the men of the submarine on their achievement, and wealthy Bremen citizens have contributed a purse of nearly one hundred marks to be presented to the captain and crew as a further evidence of honor and appreciation for what they have succeeded in doing. All this is perfectly natural and to be expected. Moreover, it is amply justified, for the feat set a new world's record in submarine performance.

But what is of still more interest on this side of the water is the pronouncedly fine expression given by Captain Koenig in appreciation of the manner in which he was received in America, and of his treatment by the United States government in his departure for his return trip. No doubt there are many thousands of German people who have believed the American government partial to the cause of the entente allies. They have construed many American official acts as indicating antipathy to the Fatherland, and have honestly questioned the actual neutrality of the United States government. The statement of Captain Koenig to his people will most certainly dispel much of this misunderstanding. He unqualifiedly commended the treatment he received at the hands of American authorities as in exact line with fair and impartial neutrality, and declared that he had no complaint to make and no criticism to offer. It is extremely gratifying to have this full and free acknowledgment from such a source. It will do much toward removing past misunderstandings and toward strengthening the historic bond of friendship between the empire and the republic.

Mr. Adair, the democratic nominee for governor, has lost no time in making prompt reply to the keynote address of his rival in the race, Mr. Goodrich, in which the republican nominee charged Indiana democracy with extravagance in state affairs because expenses are higher now than ten years ago, but failed to be fair enough to admit that the number of state institutions now cared for has increased 49 per cent., while the increase in cost amounts to but little more than 25 per cent. As The Sentinel has previously pointed out, the issue is not so much whether expenditures are now greater than ten years ago as whether the state is adequately meeting new needs and getting dollar for dollar in value for the money it is expending. Nobody has yet taken the negative side of either of the latter two propositions.

Promoters of a prize-fight scheduled at Tulsa, Okla., on Labor day, declare they're going right ahead with the mill despite orders given by the state authorities that the bruising match must not be staged. We shall soon be edified by a demonstration of who's running Oklahoma—the state government or a coterie of the low-brow pugilistic gentry. Oklahoma has often been declared eccentric, freakish and peculiar, and one never can tell what's going to happen there, but it's usually what one doesn't expect.

We haven't anything like a close acquaintance with Leon M. Estabrook, chief of the United States bureau of crop estimates and an authority on food supplies, but he's an optimistic sort of soul. Mr. Estabrook is out with the prediction that the prices of foodstuffs are soon to come down, and he voices the belief that recent abnormal rates on staples will adjust themselves by next season. And perhaps Mr. Estabrook knows what he's talking about.

Victor Murdock, the auburn-haired Kansas progressive leader, has sailed on a three-months' tour of the orient—doubtless trying to forget what his old comrade, Colonel Roosevelt, has recently done to the cherished political infant on which both had builded such tremendous hopes. And, besides, Mr. Murdock doesn't intend to be put in the position of having to assume responsibiltiy for whatever may happen in November.

It's all well and good to give every possible consideration to the rights of the employes and the railway interests in this protracted squabble, but the public, as the innocent bystander, is the one, after all, whose interests are of first importance, and who will get hurt the worst if the strike should unfortunately eventuate.

MOTOR SPEEDING.

(Indianapolis News.)

From state highway commissioners, police chiefs and service commissions comes the complaint that the problem of the speeding motorist is the worst of traffic regulation. The highway commission of Iowa, in a recent service bulletin, expresses opinions that are interesting, if not particularly helpful.

There are in Iowa 150,000 licensed automobiles, and to judge from the bulletin few chauffeurs are content to drive at a reasonable rate of speed or to slow down for obstacles. "Iowans would object," reads the bulletin, "if the Northwestern Railway company equipped one of its crack engines with proper wheels and started it off down the public highway at forty to fifty miles an hour. Yet the commission believes that many of the 150,000 cars registered in Iowa are operated in a way that makes them far more undesirable than such locomotives would be. * * * The occasions when speed more than twenty-five to thirty miles an hour can be justified or excused are so few as to be absolutely negligible. People's time is not so extremely valuable that the few minutes gained by excessive speed will ever justify their making themselves a menace to other users of the highway."

The commission notes that many manufacturers advertise that racing types of motors are to be found in the stock car models. Experience everewhere has been that, at some time or another, the owner of an automobile will endeavor to get all the speed possible, and if everything goes well the performance sometimes becomes a practice. Another danger is that incompetent persons are permitted to drive private cars. The commission advocates state control of power of cars operated in Iowa. That is, all licensed in the state would have to be of the horse-power sufficient to drive at a speed of only twenty-five or thirty-five miles an hour. The proposal is unpopular, both with the manufacturers and the car owners.

AIN'T NATURE WONDERFUL?

Unnatural History, by Eugene Ahern.

AUTO TOURING.

People go touring in pedestrian-chasers just so they can come rolling back in the old home town and startle the natives with other banners of other cities hanging all over the gas eater like a clothes line at 9 o'clock Monday morning.

This is music to the auto-tourer's ears:

"Why, Henry, jes' look where they've been, Goofville, Omelette-on the tie, Oniondale, Bugburg, an' 'all over.'"

And, of course, a Pike's Peak banner, no auto-touring party is complete without a Pike's Peak banner dangling in the zephyrs even if they only did go as far west as Hammond, Ind.

Auto touring is just one toll after another. And it's some graft, too. All a guy has to do is take a switch and when he hears a chugger come rattling along the highway shove the switch out and yell "toll."

Then he goes up and collects at least a twin jitney.

It's easy money, Eddie, even easier than the way it's extracted in auto-repair shops.

FIRE DESTROYS A HOME

Decatur, Ind., Aug. 26.—Fire of unknown origin, destroyed the home of Charles Hill, 1215 West Madison street yesterday afternoon. Mr. Hill was in the country working with his brother John Hill, and Mrs. Hill and her children were visiting neighbors, when Mrs. Hill in happening to look out of a window saw flames mounting to the sky from the roof of her home. The alarm was sent in and the fire department had water going on the flames at one. The property belongs to Willard Steele and is insured. The building is practically a total loss and nothing but a bed, a chair, porch swing and go-cart was saved of the furnishings. The loss, including both buildings and contents, will amount to about one thousand dollars.

WIGWAGS WELCOME TO ARRIVING VETERANS

Kansas City Cordial in Its Greeting to Grand Army Men.

Kansas City, Mo., Aug. 26.—First moves of a formal nature in connection with the fiftieth annual encampment of the G. A. R., which opens here next week, were made today with the opening of the national headquarters and several information booths. Headquarters of the many auxiliaries of the G. A. R. also have been opened, and by Monday morning the units of the blue-clad army will all have been marshaled and ready at the command of the commander-in-chief, Elias Monfort.

Wednesday, the day of the veterans' parade, has been declared a holiday in both Kansas City, Mo., and Kansas City, Kas., Mayor Green, of the latter city, yesterday issuing a proclamation to that effect. Both cities are decorated with flags and bunting.

Incoming veterans today will be welcomed in wigwag from the top of a high building by James H. Whittlesey, of St. Louis, chief signal officer of the commander-in-chief and commander of the survivors of the ram fleet. Four white doves will be liberated at the same time bearing ribbons upon which will be printed a welcome and a wish for a speedy accomplishment of universal peace.

Convention hall, the place for the formal meetings of the veterans, has been divided into booths in which scattered members of regiments may reunite. One of the booths has been turned over to the pension bureau at Washington, at request of E. C. Tieman, acting commissioner, and in it questions pertaining to pensions will be answered.

A thousand boy scouts will act as guides and aides to the veterans while they are here. Under the direction of Dr. James H. Sowerby, chief scout executive, they have been trained to serve the soldiers in every way. Special training in first-aid work has been given the youngsters.

"Whenever you speak to a veteran call him 'comrade,'" said Doctor Sowerby in his final instructions. "They are keen for helping the old men," Doctor Sowerby said, "and I can imagine the stories the veterans will tell them. It will be good training for the boys and should be of great service to the men of the Grand Army."

CROWD IS SHOWERED WITH BLAZING OIL

Bursting of Big Oil Tank at Charles City, Ia., is Disastrous.

Charles City, Iowa, Aug. 26.—Two men and one woman are near death from burns; nine others, including a boy and two women, were seriously burned, and a number of others were less seriously injured yesterday when a large oil tank belonging to the Standard Oil company exploded.

A great pillar of fire shot into the air for a hundred feet, following the explosion, and burning oil was scattered in all directions.

A spark from an engine which was pumping gasoline into storage tanks of the plant caused the explosion, and the fire which followed it spread rapidly, destroying the new plant and causing a loss estimated by the officials of the company at $25,000.

Panic in Neighborhood.

Pedestrians in the vicinity of the plant were the sufferers from the burning oil for the most part, and a panic was caused in the neighborhood, the residents fleeing to get away from the plant.

The hospital here soon crowded with those who had been burned by the blazing oil.

Among the more seriously injured are Rev. Mr. Proebe, Mrs. Conradt, Mrs. Sherman Hunt, Mr. Levitch, A. Gardner, H. C. Clifford, Paul Marshall, a 12-year-old boy; George Kellogg and Paul Reetz. At the hospital last night it was said the extent of the injuries to several of the more seriously burned could not be determined for several hours.

Many Wear Bandages.

Score of residents of the town were wearing bandages last night, to cover burns and scorches. When the fire first started the run of the fire department to the blaze attracted the townspeople.

As the fire spread there were a number of minor explosions, and by the time the great explosion which sent up a pillar of fire and scattered oil broadcast took place a crowd had surrounded the plant.

This accounts for the large number of persons burned. The police had all they could attend to in keeping the townspeople from gathering close to the fire.

VICTIMS OF POISONED CANDY WILL RECOVER

Attending Physicians Believe Sweets Bought Here Contained Arsenic.

An analysis of the candy believed to have contained arsenic causing the serious illness of three daughters of H. E. Weaver, a farmer residing seven miles north of Pierceton, will be made by the Fort Wayne board of health. The candy will probably be sent to the state food and drug department at Indianapolis.

The three girls will recover. Soon after eating the candy they were taken violently ill and lapsed into unconsciousness. Dr. C. E. Leedy, of Pierceton, was summoned and found the condition of the girls so alarming that he called in Dr. Charles Ireland, a specialist of Columbus, who has been visiting at Chapman Lake. They both attributed the girls' condition to arsenic poisoning.

The children are: Wilma, 2; Irene, 5, and Isobelle, 6. Irene seemed to be the worse, but late Friday night took a change for the better and was very much improved Saturday morning. Little Wilma's condition Saturday morning was more alarming.

Mr. and Mrs. Weaver came to Fort Wayne to spend the day with Elmer Weaver, who is a patient at the Lutheran hospital. While waiting for the train at the Pennsylvania station to take them home they purchased some candy to take to the children. The candy was in little telephones and was of various colors. The parents thought this would please the children. Soon after eating it, however, the children were taken violently ill and for a time it was though death was inevitable.

WILL AID THE SOLDIER AFTER HE QUITS ARMY

Employment Plan for Federal Enlisted Men Announced by Uncle Sam

Washington, D. C., Aug. 26.—A policy of caring for federal soldiers upon retirement to civil life patterned after that of the British government, which secures employment for enlisted men retiring from the army, has just been inaugurated by the United States. It is announced in a pamphlet issued today by Adjutant General McCairn, explaining how the soldier may take advantage of lucrative offers provided he has demonstrated his efficiency for civil employment during enlistment.

Recruiting officers are named in twenty-three states through whom applications may be made for employment. The pamphlet emphasizes the fact that the army offers exceptional advantages to those who desire to fit themselves for almost any line of vocational work. It also contains a long list of positions scattered throughout the United States in the filling of which former soldiers will be given preference. Many of these are state or municipal employments at salaries ranging up to $1,800 a year. The list shows the city, the position and the necessary qualifications as reported by recruiting officers who gathered the data. The purpose of the pamphlet is threefold: To attract the best class of recruits to disabuse the public mind of the impression that the army is a refuge for those unfitted for other employment and to explain to the soldiers how they may take full advantage of the vocational training in the army provided for in the reorganization bill recently enacted.

DESIGNING HUGE FIELD HOWITZERS

Army Ordnance Experts at Work on Guns Larger Than Germans'.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 26.—Army ordnance experts are at work on designs for huge field howitzers as large, or larger, than the German 42-centimetre guns which wrecked Belgian and French forts early in the war. They will be at least 16-inch calibre, with a range of twelve to fifteen miles, hurling a projectile weighing more than a ton and carrying a huge amount of high explosive.

In addition to placing several of these mammoth weapons along the coast line for mobile defense against naval attack army officials now are considering the creation of a special regiment, equipped with six of the howitzers, to work as a unit of the mobile army. It is planned to build the new howitzers primarily for transportation by rail on special cars.

To Have Taste of Grand Opera.

On October 12, Fort Wayne is to have one night of real grand opera. That is a surprising statement because while the city has had much in the way of parts of the grand opera scores produced here, aside from "Madame Butterfly" and "Cavaleria Rusticana," and the productions of the Aborn Opera company, music lovers here have either contented themselves with going to larger cities to attend performances or hearing only snatches of them at home. E. A. Bachelder, representing the Boston National Grand Opera company, has been in Fort Wayne and received an encouragement that surprised him. As an outcome with Mr. Bachelder's conferences with prominent business men and non-professional singers, who are also business men, it has been arranged for the company to appear at the New Palace on the date named. It is not fully decided what will be given here but "Faust" seems to be the most favored opera. The fact that it is to be produced at the New Palace insures room and reasonably priced seats. The opera company will stop off here on the way to Indianapolis, where a number of operas are to be given. The performance here will have everything necessary, a large orchestra, chorus, scenery and metropolitan soloists of the first class.

"UNCLE TOM'S CABIN" TONIGHT

The Wm. H. Kibble's Revival Will Appear at the Majestic again tonight.

It is an undisputed fact that there is no better production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin' on the road today than that made by Kibble and Martin several years ago and improved with each season since. It is the largest company with possibly a few exceptions, such as special revivals, ever used in the production of the play, it is claimed, for it contains a company of the original "Georgia shouters" who play the negroes in the cotton fields, and who are seen in plantation dances and heard in plantation songs in scenes showing the quarters of the negroes on a plantation where the master was a humane man. There are solos, quartets, and choruses in which the old-time songs as well as the new ones are sung by voices having the peculiar negro sweetness. There are a number of excellent dancers and they dance among others the latest shuffle, called the "S'wanee Shine." There is a pack of genuine bloodhounds, gaunt and ugly looking beasts, such as were used to track escaped criminals in the south. These bloodhounds, brought from the south, are a part of the pack used by a prison contractor at his convict pen in Georgia, and are used in the scenes where the escaped slaves are followed, and with their deep-mouth baying and impressiveness to the escape of Eliza and of George Harris. There are also horses, donkeys and ponies and altogether the live stock exhibit is extensive. The scenery is a special feature of the production. Some of the most notable scenes include the humble cabin of Uncle Tom, and an old southern road, Skinner's tavern, the ice-gorged Ohio river by moonlight, the home of Phineas Friend, the wild rocky pass in southern Ohio, and the transformation, called "The Holy City."

NEW BILL COMING.

Last Time Tonight for Current Program at the New Palace.

The feature bill which has established itself as a prime favorite at the New Palace since Thursday closes with this evening's performance to make way for an entirely new array. On the current program are the Norine Carmen minstrels in fifteen minutes of an old-time minstrel first part—burnt cork, gags, tam, bones and all—but with a statuesque blonde for interlocutor; Frances Dyer, the charming young soprano whom Fort Wayne would like even if she were not a native daughter; James H. Cullen, the man from the west, in his medley of songs and nonsense; Lawrence Crane, the Irish wizard, doing a grist of baffling tricks and illusions; Fox and Ingraham, a surprisingly clever team of songsters, and the Three Alexander Girls in a dancing novelty de luxe.

JIM CULLEN,

A group of four Chinese comedians and vocalists known as the Ching Wha Four will be the headline attraction on the bill for the first four days of the coming week. These chinks have been here before, scoring a hit with Fort Wayne audiences. The Three Bennett Sisters will give a physical culture demonstration, in which these divinely formed women demonstrate the value of proper exercise in building up the human body. Harry Brooks, assisted by Katherine Clinton and company will appear in a dramatic hit entitled "The Old Minstrel Man." Sandy Shaw, the peer of Scotch comedians; White, Mullalley and White, the singing acrobatic dancing trio, and the Dares in their novel athletic comedy are other features of the new bill.

AT THE TEMPLE.

"SINNERS," OPENING BILL.

Whoever respects the dignity of the stage or is desirous that the drama maintain its high place among the fine arts, must rejoice in the success of Owen Davis' new comedy-drama, "Sinners," which begins a week's engagement at the Temple theatre soon. Mr. Louis Wolford provides his special stock company for the local engagement, and those who care for the best the modern stage has to offer will make no mistake in going to the Temple next week, if only for the purpose of seeing this admirable aggregation of players. The company includes Maurice Jenkins, Jack Doty, Annie Burt, Lillian Haig, Sarah Kyles, Claire Maslen, Owen Coll, Walter Turner, Dave Callis, L. Wolford, Walter Turner, Charles Franklyn.

Entire Body Covered With Watery Pimples
Would Scratch Till Blood Came.

Providence, R. I., Oct. 15. 1915.—"Some time ago my skin began to break out in little pimples. These filled with water and when they opened the watery fluid ran out and spread the trouble until my entire body from my face to my feet was covered. The itching was something terrible, and I would scratch until the blood came, and my skin would feel as if it were burning. I tried a prescription and several kinds of salve, but none helped me. After I had suffered this way for about 14 or 15 months I tried Resinol Ointment and Resinol Soap, and the first application relieved me so that I slept that night. In six weeks I was cured." (Signed) Raymond E. Madley, 690 Union Ave.

Doctors have prescribed the Resinol treatment for over twenty years. Sold by all druggists. Samples free—write to Dept. 3-S, Resinol, Baltimore, Md.—Advertisement.

BRIDGES OPPOSED TO RELEASE OF STUDENTS

Not Best for Morale and Discipline of Troops, His Belief.

Indianapolis, Aug. 26.—Adjt. Gen. Frank L. Bridges does not believe that the discharge of the college and university students among the Indiana troops at the border is the best for the morals and discipline of the troops. He has been expressing his opinions of the reported proposal of the war department to discharge the students before Sept. 1 so they may return to school.

Speaking of the proposed discharge of such guardsmen Adjutant General Bridges said:

"If any man in the United States between the ages of 18 and 45 years can afford to give his time to his country, it is the students who are going to sollege. They can best afford to sacrifice because in nine cases out of ten they are going to school at the expense of their families, or have enough money saved to pay their own expenses. Few, if any, of them have any dependents, and probably all of their education up to the present time has been obtained at the expense of state and federal government. The student is the type of man needed as a volunteer because he gives the best account of himself by reason of his ability and schooling. He can better afford to 'waste' a year or two than the man with a family, a profession or a business."

General Bridges says he does not believe a class of students should be established and the college men discharged because of the antagonism it will cause on the part of the men retained, many of whom can ill afford the sacrifice. As yet, he says, he has received no word of how the students among the Indiana troops will be discharged, whether on their own application or automatically.

According to the adjutant general, his department now is receiving few applications for the release of guardsmen with dependents. When the first mobilization orders were received his office was besieged with women, old and young, and children, seeking some way to keep their men at home. Brides came in and explained "we were just married," and "he simply can't go." "He" went, as there was no provision which allowed the state authorities to discharge "him."

Other women came carrying babes, some a few weeks old only, and explained that "husband and father" was the sole support. Nothing could be done for them. Mothers appeared, fearing in the first days that actually fighting would occur immediately, and begged hysterically that their sons be sent back home. In addition to the personal visits hundreds of letters were received.

Thirty-five guardsmen entitled to discharge under the rule allowing such action if they have persons dependent upon them have arrived at Fort Benjamin Harrison, and others probably will follow soon. Nearly all the relatives of such men, and the men themselves, now understand the way of obtaining the discharge and few applications for assistance are made of the adjutant general's office.

General Bridges says that the hardship is apparent in the cases of young men who earned from $85 to $150 a month before the order to mobilize came. Many of them were buying their homes on contract, and when they suddenly were ordered to report, and their pay was reduced to $15 a month, their positions became difficult.

On the question of pay for the Indiana guardsmen, as yet no definite pay day has been established. Some have received their pay regularly and others have not. General Bridges says that is the fault of the commanding officers who make up the payrolls. The payrolls had not been completed before the troops left the mobilization camp, and now many of them are received in such condition they cannot be honored until returned to Llano Grande and corrected. That caused long delays.

The cost of the mobilization to the state was comparatively small, General Bridges says, because the federal government paid most of it. Only a few companies were held for a few days at the expense of the state, and the expenses for them will be less than $10,000, General Bridges says.

ALL MEN MUST REPORT BY SUNDAY AFTERNOON

Battery D Will Leave as Soon as Arrangements Are Completed.

Upon receipt of the orders to mobilize, Captain John Scheffer, commanding officer of battery D, announces that every member must report at the company headquarters by Sunday noon. This is an official order and disobedience will be punished by court martial.

The local organization will leave for Fort Benjamin Harrison as soon as all arrangements have been made locally, as well as at the adjutant general's office in Indianapolis. It is believed the boys will leave either Monday or Tuesday.

Niel McKay has donated the use of the large hall at West Main street and Webster street, for use of the battery during the mobilization period. This hall will be used by the men who reside out of town as a sleeping place. The men who reside in the city will be given permission to go home each evening while the battery remains in Fort Wayne.

At noon Saturday nearly one hundred privates and five officers had reported for duty at the headquarters of the organization.

Arrangements have been made with Harry Wiebke, proprietor of the Hof Brau, to have the members of the battery to take their meals at that place. The entire second floor has been rented by Captain Scheffer, who announces that the meals will be served at 7:45 a. m., 12:30 p. m. and 5:45 p. m. These hours will remain the same until further orders.

Quartermaster General Davis of the Indiana national guard, called Captain Scheffer by telephone Friday evening to arrange for the transportation of the men to Fort Benjamin Harrison. It is presumed that a special train or trolley will take them to the state's mobilization grounds.

Since it is anticipated that the local battery will replace the Purdue battery at Llano Grande, Texas, the company will remain only a few days at the state rendezvous and will then be hastened to the border. At Indianapolis the men will be furnished with uniforms and personal equipment.

A regular program for the day's work has been announced by Captain Scheffer and is as follows: Breakfast, 7:45 a. m.; drill call, 8:45 a. m.; recall, 10 a. m.; dinner, 12:30 p. m.; drill call, 1:45 p m.; recall, 3 p. m.; non-commissioned officers' school, 3:30 p. m.; supper, 5:45 p. m.; drill call, 8 p. m.; recall, 9:00 p. m.

BRAINS AND COMMON SENSE MAKE PERFECT CHORUS GIRL, SAYS ZIEGFELD.

Florenz Ziegfeld, whose business is to pick beautiful women for his shows, says Hazel Lewis, who has been with the Follies for five years, is The perfect chorus girl.

Miss Lewis has never whiffed a cigarette nor sipped a cocktail, he says. She has brains and common sense and is not afraid to use both.

Says Ziegfeld, who has employed more girls in the chorus than any other man: "The cocktail-drinking, cigarette-smoking chorus girl makes no hit with me. I pay Miss Lewis more than any other chorus girl in my companies. I wish I could find more like her."

RUSS SACRIFICE OWN MEN BY OWN GUNFIRE

Vienna Says Tactics Have No Precedent in Wars of the World.

Vienna, July 30 (correspondence of the Associated Press).—The Russian offensive against the Austro-Hungarian troops is being conducted, according to Austrian officers returned from the front, with tactics that hardly have a precedent in the history of the wars of the world.

These tactics are, briefly, to annihilate the Austrians by forcing Russian soldiers to advance in their own artillery fire, drawing the Austrians from their bomb-and-sheel-proof shelters into hand-to-hand combat, and then mowing down both Austrians and Russians by a withering drumfire. Great Russian losses, it is claimed, are due to this method of warfare.

The Russian method of attack in the Bukowina and Volhynia, the Austrians say, consists of artillery preparation lasting from twenty-four to forty-eight hours. Then come the first Russian infantry troops, in from six to fourteen rows, driven forward by Russian machine guns and by Cossacks armed with the dreaded 'nagaikas," or lead-tipped whips.

As they advance the Russian artillery fire abates somewhat, but between it and the Austrian fire from 40 to 50 per cent of the first troops sometimes reach the trenches. Their arrival naturally forces the Austrians to abandon their shelters, and as soon as they do so the Russian drumfire begins again.

In both the Bukowina and the Volhynia offensives it is estimated that the Russians use up about two million shells every twenty-four hours—shells of Russian, Japanese and American make, and thrown from every caliber of gun, including naval pieces apparently dismounted from warships.

Lonesomest Man Toils in Dark Room and the Person Who Sees Most People Sells Tickets

HERE IS THE LONESOMEST MAN AND LEAST LONELY GIRL IN FORT WAYNE.

CHALRES E. EVARTS.

MRS. MAMIE DALTON.

Who is the lonesomest man in town?

On the other hand who sees the most people because their business puts them face to face with the city?

This question has been asked over and over and a Sentinel reporter wondered about it.

He started out to locate the person who was just naturally thrown up against the people of the city and being paid for it. He wondered what would be the impressions mankind and womankind made on the person they passed.

It was late afternoon and the reporter dropped into the stream of humanity, which never rests in its movement up and down the principal streets of Fort Wayne, from dawn until long after darkness. The hurrying feet and dragging feet caused riffles and eddies in the stream. The current passed store after store, it was blocked here for a minute, it paused to look at the next window, but never lost its motion.

"We just have time to take in a movie," somebody said.

There was the big idea for Steven, the reporter. In the course of a day nearly everybody has time to take in a movie. The ticket taker at the movie house must see most people. Steven hurried around the corner.

Thousands Seen Daily.

"How many folks do you see in a day?" he asked of Mrs. Mamie Dalton, 125½ East Douglas avenue, who sells tickets at the Jefferson theatre.

"Thousands," Mrs. Dalton said quietly.

"How many do you notice?"

"Thousands."

"Do you pay attention to everybody who comes past the window?"

"Just about."

Mrs. Dalton at the task of receiving nickels and dimes from 1 o'clock in the afternoon until 10 o'clock at night, with time out for supper. She has been on the job for more than two years. She estimates that she has looked into 5,000,000,000 faces during that time. Many of them are the same faces seen over and over whose owners never miss a good movie, three times a week.

Mrs. Dalton sees more women than men. Seven-tenths of the customers of the movie house are women and girls. Not half of the women who attend the movies regularly chew gum. Mrs. Dalton does not chew gum.

Men who are movie fans are generally married men. They are the best kind of married men. They take their wives with them to the show. Mrs. Dalton never heard of a married man who was a movie fan and who beat his wife.

Mrs. Dalton tries to read the character of people who approach the window of the movie house. Sometimes she has natural prejudices to overcome she admits. In her estimation the young man who always flips a cigarette into the street before he swings up to the window is handicapped. She has a grudge against the fellow who always presents a $5 bill.

"Yes, I notice women's clothes. I scrutinize a woman from her feet up. I always start the inspection at their feet."

Can't Pick Out the Goat.

"When several women come up in a group I can always tell who is going to pay. I can tell by the way some of them hang back. They all run a bluff generally. Some of them do not have change. Some leave their money at home. I can nearly always pick out the one who will be the goat before they reach the window.

"No, men do not act that way. Men are more liberal. Men generally all want to pay and have the money ready. Men are easier to deal with.

"I read faces by eyes generally. I have no way of finding out afterwards, but I most always form an opinion of people who pass and I think my opinions are generally right."

The Lonesomest Person.

But what about the lonesomest person? What would be the views of life of the person who civilization had set apart by the nature of his calling?

Who would the man be who sees fewest people in the course of a day? It couldn't be the grocer or the ice man or the laborer in any line, for these men all jostle with their fellows many times in the course of their working hours.

In a photograph gallery the strenuous Steven marched. Of the clerk he asked: "Show me the man who does not see anybody."

"I can't, he is busy."

"Who do you mean?" wondered Steven.

"I thought you referred to the man in the dark room."

"I will be back," said Steven, and hurried away to sharpen his lead pencil.

On his return Steven stumbled down the stairs into the black vault where Charles E. Evarts, 719 Columbia street, works at developing pictures for the Parrot art studio.

Touch of Mystery.

There was a touch of mystery in the many colored shadows. There was the outline of big jars, the gurgle of running water, the click of shears. There were boxes and stools, but Evarts later said that he never sat down during working hours.

The man in the big black apron approached the blinking reporter.

"How many folks do you see as you work each day?" Steven asked the mild little man when his eyes became accustomed to the streaky rays of vivid white light which pierced the inky darkness from the developing box.

"Not any generally. Some days I never see daylight."

"Do you get lonesome?"

"No. You see I keep studying new faces all the time. I have looked at the pictured face of most of the people in Fort Wayne in the thirty-three years I have followed this business."

"Can you read character in the face?"

"I imagine I can. I try to make out what a man is by the squint of his eye. Because I do not see people often is no sign I do not know men. I have never bought any gold bricks or fence stock."

"When you see a picture do you know the person afterwards?"

"I know that I have seen the face before and that is all. I can't know the name. That is what troubles me when I am out on the street. Most of the people I look at I wonder, 'Where did I see you before?' I can't quite place them. The half forgotten memory of their pictured face haunts me like a troublesome ghost."

"What do you do when you are away from here?"

"I am a lodge man. I attend two lodges. I like fellowship and brotherhood of men even if I do live as a recluse while I make out an average of 500 pictures a day."

Other clerks and workmen at the Parrot studio call Evarts "the human clock." He counts all the time as he works. He can write and count at the same time. He counts in his head the number of seconds needed to print a picture. He counts the time for developing. He can count to three minutes and not be a second off. He can keep track of three counts at once. He never uses a clock to do his timing like many other men who do developing work.

THIS BOY HAD NO CHANCE

The parents of a small boy were greatly disturbed by a teacher's report that their son was the laziest boy in school.

"He is so lazy," the teacher declared, "that whenever he has to read, he becomes sleepy in a very few minutes."

Scoldings and whippings proving of no avail, the boy was taken to the family physician. The latter passed him on to an optometrist, who found him much in need of glasses. As soon as he began to wear these he kept up easily with his class.

This boy's case is like the cases of many other children, and of many adults also. They have no obvious symptoms of eyestrain, but they find it hard to concentrate their attention. Their heads tire quickly when they try to think. They are nervous and irritable. All this impairs their efficiency, sending their earning power far below what it ought to be. They become difficult persons to get along with at home and in their business dealings. When, as sometimes happens, their unsuspected eyestrain makes them so overwrought that they cannot sleep, their plight is miserable indeed.

If, then, you suspect that your eyesight is not what it ought to be; if, no matter how good it seems, you suffer from the physical and mental troubles mentioned above, play safe by consulting C. A. Meige, 1012 Calhoun.—Advertisement.

KNITTERS HONOR THEO. F. THIEME

Give President of Wayne Mills Reception on Anniversary of Company.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Wayne Knitting mills was celebrated in a most fitting manner last night, when the members of the Knitters' union gathered at the Wayne Knit club house and held a reception in honor of Thodore F. Thieme, president of the company. The celebration came rather as a surprise to the head of the great concern, who was unaware that a jubilee of such great proportions had been planned.

During the course of the evening Mr. Thieme was presented with a handsome silver loving cup, sixteen inches high, bearing an inscription from the donors and also a likeness of the recipient and the Wayne Knitting mills engraved upon it. The gift was a remarkable tribute to the esteem in which Mr. Thieme is held by the employes of the mills and was typical of the spirit of co-operation and loyalty which prevails between employes and employed. Besides this gift to Mr. Thieme the veteran knitters, who were present as honored guests, were each presented with a box of cigars. The seven veterans so honored were Carl Clausner, Herman Miller, Wilhelm Rosseler, Richard Lohse, Louis Ludwig, Ernst Jahn and Earnest Minkel.

The jubilee celebration was held in a hall which was magnificently decorated with American flags and colored lights. The program which had been arranged for the celebration was a most enjoyable one, and was brought to a close by a sumptuous banquet. The chief address of the evening was delivered by Mr. Chas. Butler, past president of the Knitters' union, who outlined in a very masterly way the growth and expansion of the industry since its establishment twenty-five years ago. He referred to the friendly relations always existing between the management and the employes and declared this to be the chief reason for the wonderful growth of the institution. He closed his address with a fine tribute to Theodore F. Thieme, and told of the great personal interest the president of the mills had always felt for the employes.

Following the address of Mr. Butler, Emil Weisbach, a member of the committee on arrangements, recited in German "The Theme of the Stocking," and was greeted with warm applause, especially from the hundreds of Germans who were present. The speech of presentation of the loving cup to Mr. Thieme was made by Arno Reuther, president of the Knitters' union. The Saxonia Singing society rendered several selections and Fred Fowler sang the "Song of the Stocking." While this song was being sung, Wayne Knit stockings bearing the words of the chorus were distributed, and the whole gathering joined in singing the refrain. Emil Weisbach, assisted by Cartoonist Chas. Firks, entertained the company with an illustrated recitation, which was highly enjoyed by all.

Near the close of the celebration Mr. Thieme delivered a short personal talk, in which he expressed his thanks and appreciation for the honor which had been conferred upon him. He declared that the wonderful expansion and prosperity of the industry had been made possible by the mutual good fellowship existing between the management and the workers and praised the loyalty of the Knitters' union.

WILL TRAVEL LIKE KINGS.

Special Train Will Take Nickel Plate Vets to Convention.

The schedule of the special train which will carry the members of the Nickel Plate Employes' Veteran association to Buffalo next Saturday to attend the banquet and convention was bulletined at the depot, roundhouse, shops and elsewhere this morning. When the train leaves Fort Wayne at 8:15 Friday evening, as the second section of No. 4, it will have two high-back seat vestibule coaches and two Pullman sleeping cars. Two more sleeping cars will be added at Bellevue and at Cleveland the train will pick up another sleeping car and a dining car, making a total of five Pullman cars, two coaches and a dining car. It will arrive in Buffalo at 8 o'clock, breakfast being served in the dining car en route to all who care to avail themselves of the opportunity at thirty-five cents each. At Buffalo the train will be delivered to the New York Central and taken to Niagara Falls, where the veterans will be given opportunity to spend two or three hours at that famous resort. It will return to Buffalo at noon, a short time before the business of the convention commences. Returning the train will leave Buffalo at 10:30 o'clock in the evening and arrive in Fort Wayne just ahead of westbound passenger train No. 1, about 11:15 o'clock Sunday morning. One of the sleeping cars will be cut out at Cleveland, but the balance of the train will continue to Fort Wayne. The applications for sleeping car and other accommodations on the train are pouring in rapidly, indicating a great interest in the convention and the largest crowd that ever attended the meetings. The business session of the convention will commence at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon, September 2, one of the first acts being the election of the officers, and the banquet will commence at 6:30 o'clock.

TO ELIMINATE FLAWS.

New York Central Has New Process for Preventing Rail-Breaks.

The New York Central railway has announced an important discovery in the perfection of a process for the elimination of hidden flaws in steel rails, one of the principal causes these modern days of heavy cars and still heavier engines, of train wreck. It was declared by the officials of the New York Central that this new process has reduced rail breaks on its own lines of from one break in 600 rails to one break in 142,000. The process was developed in the railway shops by the New York Central's staff of specialists under the direction of P. H. Dudley. Flaws or interior fissures, as they are called, are taken from the rail, in reheating plants attached to the railrolling mills. The process is claimed to be a positive remedy. Accidents caused by broken rails during the year 1915 numbered 3,345 and killed 205 persons, injured 7,341, and caused property losses of over $4,000,000.

BUSINESS ON NICKEL PLATE.

(Bellevue Gazette.)

The unprecedented business rush on the Nickel Plate continues with no signs of any let-up in the future. During the past few weeks twenty-seven firemen have been hired and placed in service on the Fort Wayne division of the road and the end is not in sight, firemen being hired daily. During the summer season the usual procedure is to lay off a number of men, but during the present summer only two have been "set off" and these were recalled within a month's time. As a result of the heavy business many thousands of dollars have been distributed among Bellevue residents during the summer months.

Most of them were caught in the Tecumseh river, near the town of Fremont.

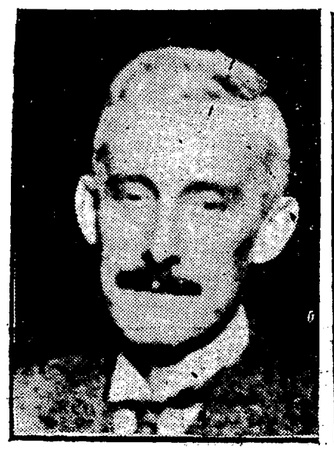
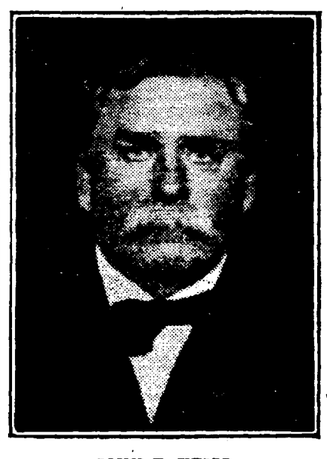
THE QUARTER CENTURY CLUB, ITS PRESIDENT AND SECRETARY AND FOUR OLD MEMBERS.



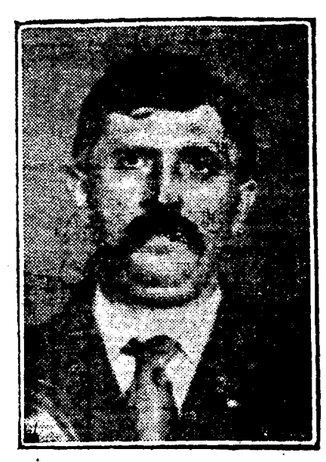
E. A. BARNES (PRESIDENT).

M. S. WILLSON (SECRETARY).



JOHN F. KEISS.

C. S. REHRER.



H. R. REHM.

WILLIAM H. SCHULTZ.

There are now thirty-seven officials and employes at the local General Electric works whose combined service with the company or its predecessor is 1,036 years. These men are the members of the Quarter Century club, and the average period of their connection with the works is twenty-eight years.

The club was organized Jan. 28, 1916, at a banquet at the Hotel Anthony at which the chief speaker was A. L. Rohrer, of Schenectady, N. Y., a member of the Quarter Century club of that city, who explained the objects of the club and told of the social benefits which would arise from an organizatiion of one in Fort Wayne.

Twenty-nine names were enrolled at that meeting and nine have been added since. One of the charter members—William Rehling—is deceased, leaving the membership today just thirty-seven. Eligibility to membership is a continuous service of twenty-five years with the company.

The membership and the date of beginning service with the works is as follows: J. J. Wood, January, 1877; William Driftmeyer, August, 1883; John F. Keiss, November, 1884; William Rehling, May, 1884; William H. Schultz, July, 1885; C. S. Reher, October, 1885; H. R. Rehm, August, 1885; M. S. Willson, October, 1885; H. C. Beers, August, 1887; Fred F. Miller, July, 1887; William Raidy, September, 1887; George Wood, March, 1887; F. S. Hunting, October, 1888; Stuart Rehrer, February, 1888; William Donnel, May, 1888; William Murphy, September, 1888; Fred Kiefharber, November, 1888; E. A. Barnes, April, 1889; Harry Evans, November, 1889; William Wurtle, June, 1889; William Brennen, September, 1889; D. S. Meyers, June, 1889; Tony Miller, September, 1889; William P. Kindt, March, 1889; Alex Schlatter, September, 1889; Samuel Brownsberger, July, 1889; S. W. Richards, July, 1889; John N. Kress, November, 1889; John E. Hall, December, 1889; A. L. Hadley, November, 1890; W. G. Beaman, November, 1890; Fred Hilgeman, November, 1890; William Haag, February, 1891; Eugene McLaughlin, October, 1891; August Kayser, May, 1891; William Crighton, May, 1891; Clark Orr, October, 1891, and E. A. Wagner, October, 1891.

There are many men who will be eligible to membership within the next year or two, and it is predicted that the club will have nearly 100 members two or three years hence. John F. Keiss, M. S. Willson, William H. Schultz C. S. Rehrer and H. R. Rehm bear the distinction of having been with the local plant from the beginning, when it was owned and controlled by Mr. Jenney. They worked through his administration and that of R. T. McDonald, and are likely to serve the present administration a number of years. Their portraits, as well as that of Factory Supt. E. A. Barnes, the first president of the club, are presented above. M. S. Willson is secretary of the club.

Preliminary plans for a celebration are now on and will soon be developed. Instead of a banquet at a hotel, it has been suggested by one of the leading members that the club hold a picnic in some grove easily reached by automobiles and the proposition seems to meet with favor. If a picnic is held it will take place in a week or two, before the weather gets cold.

DRINKS INK WHEN SHE FAILS TO KIDNAP BABE

Child-Wife Wanted Infant in Hope Husband Would Return to Her.

Chicago, Ill., Aug. 26.—A 17-year-old Evanston bride attempted suicide yesterday after a frustrated attempt to kidnap a neighbor's child in an effort to win back her husband, who left her for an actress.

The woman, Mrs. Lucille Ross, 1426 Sherman avenue, swallowed the contents of an ink bottle, half of a bottle of fact lotion and part of the contents of a medicine bottle, and was in a critical condition last night.

Married before she was 17 years old, the girl was deserted a few months later, it is said, when her husband became enamored of an actress. The bride has been heartbroken since. She told relatives and friends that if she had a baby she felt sure her husband would return to her.

Her mother, Mrs. Jessie Gillen, and two little daughters, Marion and Gladys, had been visiting her. They departed Thursday. While there the children had played with Ernestina Broucek, 4 years old, 1456 Sherman avenue.

Loneliness against engulfed the young wife. Desperate, she took the little Broucek girl down town.

Yesterday morning she and the child returned to Evanston after, it was learned, a matron at the Union station had found her and the little girl there.

Back in her home, Mrs. Ross wrote a note and then swallowed such liquids as she thought would bring death. The note read:

"Nobody put me up to this. I did it myself."

In Evanston it is sid that Mrs. Roth does not know the whereabouts of her husband.

Stielow, farm hand, said by police authorities to have "the mentality of a child of seven," will not be executed for the murder of Charles Phelps and his housekeeper, Miss Margaret Wolcott, of West Shelby, N. Y., if the confession of Irving King, who says he is the real murderer, is confirmed.

King, a horse trader and peddler, has twice confessed guilt of the crimes, the police say, implicating his friend, Clarence O'Connell, now in Auburn prison.

The date of the execution of Stielow has been set four different times, and each time execution has been postponed. His nephew, Nelson Green, now undergoing a 20-year sentence at Elmira, because he pleaded guilty of participation in the crime, also will get his liberty if King's confession is confirmed.

CITY HALL NEWS.

Assessed Too Low.

Some property in Fort Wayne is being assessed too low is the belief of Controller Baade. He shows that Evansville has a valuation of $20,000,000 more than Fort Wayne and basing it on the rate of 91.5, the $20,000,000 would bring additional revenue of $180,000. Mr. Baade says if city property was assessed higher—and in his opinion some of it ought to be—the tax levy could be reduced. He cites two ways of getting revenue, one by taxation and the other by valuation. The city controller says the assessed valuation of the city of Fort Wayne should not be less than that of Evansville.

Return From Baltimore.

Fort Wayne was represented at Baltimore by Frank J. Dix, chief electrician of the city light and power works, and Robert J. Gaskill, superintendent of the police and fire alarm systems, at a meeting of the National Association of Municipal Engineers. Mr. Gaskill was elected president of the association and Mr. Dix, speaking at the meeting, told of the growth of the Fort Wayne plant, showing how it has meant a saving of much money in current. Service, Mr. Dix told the Baltimore meeting, was the watchword of an electric lighting plant. Both men were deeply interested in the sessions of the convention and state it was one of the most enthusiastic ever held.

To Deliver Bills.

Beginning Monday the water works department will deliver current water bills which will run delinquent twenty days after date of delivery. Meters will be read every three months, in March, June, September and December. Bills will be rendered quarterly to the consumer using more than the minimum. Police Chief Lenz has received a letter from the city board of health informing him of the order that children under 16 years must be kept away from public gatherings. The chief is asked to pass the order to his men and see that it is obeyed. The letter shows that a violation of the order is a violation of law, subjecting the violator to a penalty.

ADJOURNMENT PLAN IS GIVEN NEW JOLT

Senator Owen Renews Effort for Corrupt Practice Measure.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 26.—Senator Owen made another futile effort in the senate today to get consideration of the corrupt practices bill. Senator Smoot, republican, objected, but Senator Borah declared the republican leaders could bind him to no legislative program and said he desired to vote on both the corrupt practices and immigration bills before adjournment.

Senators Reed and Saulsbury, democrats, declared they would aid Senator Owen in an effort to get the corrupt practices bill before the senate and that precipitated a flutter over the democratic program for adjournment next week.

Senator Reed declared the republicans did not want to pass the corrupt practices bill "because the old guard in control of the party and the candidate want a corrupt election." Indications were for a close fight over Senator Owen's motion when he makes it.

When the senate resumed discussion of the revenue bill today Senator Gronna, republican, ridiculed the democratic national convention's declaration for economy, charging that the party had piled up appropriations for the last fiscal year greater than any other in the country's history except during the civil war.

John Sommers, companion of the old man on pleasure jaunts which he already has testified to in court, Barney Bertsche and other witnesses will be called on to testify.

DANIELS IN SHARP REPLY TO CRITICS

Secretary of Navy Gives Answers to Questions Fired at Him.

Milbridge, Me., Aug. 26.—Secretary of the Navy Daniels delivered here last night the first of a series of speeches he will make in this state during the next few days which mark his entry into the campaign for the re-election of President Wilson. While he touched on other topics to some extent, Mr. Daniels devoted himself particularly to answering charges made by Representative A. P. Gardner, of Massachusetts, who has been the secretary's chief critic in congress.

Mr. Daniels referred to a series of thirteen questions regarding the administration of the navy which Mr. Gardner propounds to the secretary in a letter, saying that all of them had been asked by Mr. Gardner and answered satisfactorily by the navy department many times.

Didn't Sing 'Em to Him.

"There are doubtless people who are able to ask more questions than Mr. Gardner," the secretary said, "but I doubt if anyone has ever asked the same questions so many times without paying the slightest attention to the answers. I have done everything but sing them to him, and while goodness knows I am no singer, if I thought that by so doing I could get him to stop asking questions long enough to listen to the answers I would gladly set them to music."

Answering one of Mr. Gardner's questions which alleged that twelve of the twenty-one battleships in the fleet recorded unsatisfactory scores in the 1914 battle practice, the secretary produced a letter from Capt. C. P. Plunkett, director of gunnery exercises, who said of his twenty years' experience in the navy:

"I know no time during that period when the enemies of our country had more to fear from the batteries of our fleet than they have today."

Captain Plunkett added that by direction of the secretary the widest possible publicity would be given to the battle practice results next month.

Undermines Confidence.

"I do not sympathize with this form of criticism," the gunnery director wrote, referring to Mr. Gardner's question, "and believe that it will undermine the confidence of the people in the fleet and the confidence of the fleet people in their ships and in the officers who are charged with the responsibility of the preparation of the fleet for war.

"I consider such criticism and attacks on our target practice and the publication of the facts in connection therewith have been of the greatest use to every enemy of the government, both in our own country and abroad.

"On the floor of congress," Mr. Daniels continued, "Mr. Gardner said he wished he could have the opinion of the official observer on our battle ships as to their target practice. I read him his opinion. These are not my words, not those of any politician nor any civil appointee of a political party. They are uttered with full knowledge of his responsibility by one of the foremost officers of the United States navy and an expert on these subjects."

Answers Torpedo Question.

Another question dealt with the type of torpedoes with which battleships were equipped, Mr. Gardner asserting that those in use in 1914 had been declared obsolete by navy ordnance officials. He asked if the secretary knew this when he issued his 1914 reports.

"We not only knew it, but were already manufacturing long-range torpedoes to take their places," Mr. Daniels, adding that these facts also had been contained in his own report and that of the chief of ordnance to which Mr. Gardner referred.

"I am also glad to inform him," he continued, "that since then all the dreadnoughts in commission have been equipped with these new torpedoes."

The secretary refuted Mr. Gardner's assertions that there had been undue delay in the completion of navy ships of various types now under construction. Labor conditions made it difficult to hasten this work, he said, but the department was doing all in its power in this regard and had plans for the 1917 ships ready before congress had passed the appropriation bill authorizing their construction.

CONTINUE TO DECREASE.

During the twenty-four hours ended at 10 a. m. today there were only ninety-one new cases, the lowest in a month, and twenty-five deaths. Yesterday there were ninety-four cases and twenty-two deaths.

MACHINES SUPPLANT THE OLD GREY MARE

Motor Driven Vehicles Have Increased Seventy Per Cent in Six Years.

Boston, Mass., Aug. 26—Motor vehicle traffic in Massachusetts has increased at the rate of 70 per cent a year for the last six years while horse drawn traffic has increased 5 per cent a year. These statistics have been gathered from reports made on the use of the 1,100 miles of highways embraced in the state system.

In 1909 when the state highway commission made its first traffic census, taken at 238 points on the road system, 61 per cent of all vehicles passing these stations were drawn by horses and only 39 per cent were self propelled. The counts were made during fourteen hours each day for seven consecutive days.

In 1912 the percentages were reversed, 63 per cent being motor vehicles and 37 per cent horse drawn. But the annual report of the commission for 1915, just issued, shows that last year 82½ per cent of all traffic was motor driven.

During the six year period the total traffic carried by the roads increased 145 per cent, but motor vehicles increased 420 per cent while horse vehicles decreased 30 per cent.

The number of motor trucks increased in almost the same proportion as touring cars and runabouts in the three years from 1912 to 1915. The increase was 230 per cent for trucks compared with 114 for touring cars and 122 for runabouts.

There was an increase of over 61 per cent in the value of the automobile exports during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, over the same period ending June 30, 1915, according to figures compiled by the department of commerce.

During 1915-16, 77,496 vehicles valued at $97,464,381 were shipped abroad in addition to parts valued at $22,536,485. Of the machines exported 21,265 were commercial vehicles valued at $56,805,548 and 56,231 passenger cars valued at $40,658,833.

During the fiscal year of 1915 there were 37,876 vehicles exported, having a value of $60,254,635. The 1915 exports consisted of 13,996 commercial vehicles valued at $39,140,682 and 23,800 passenger cars valued at $21,113,953.

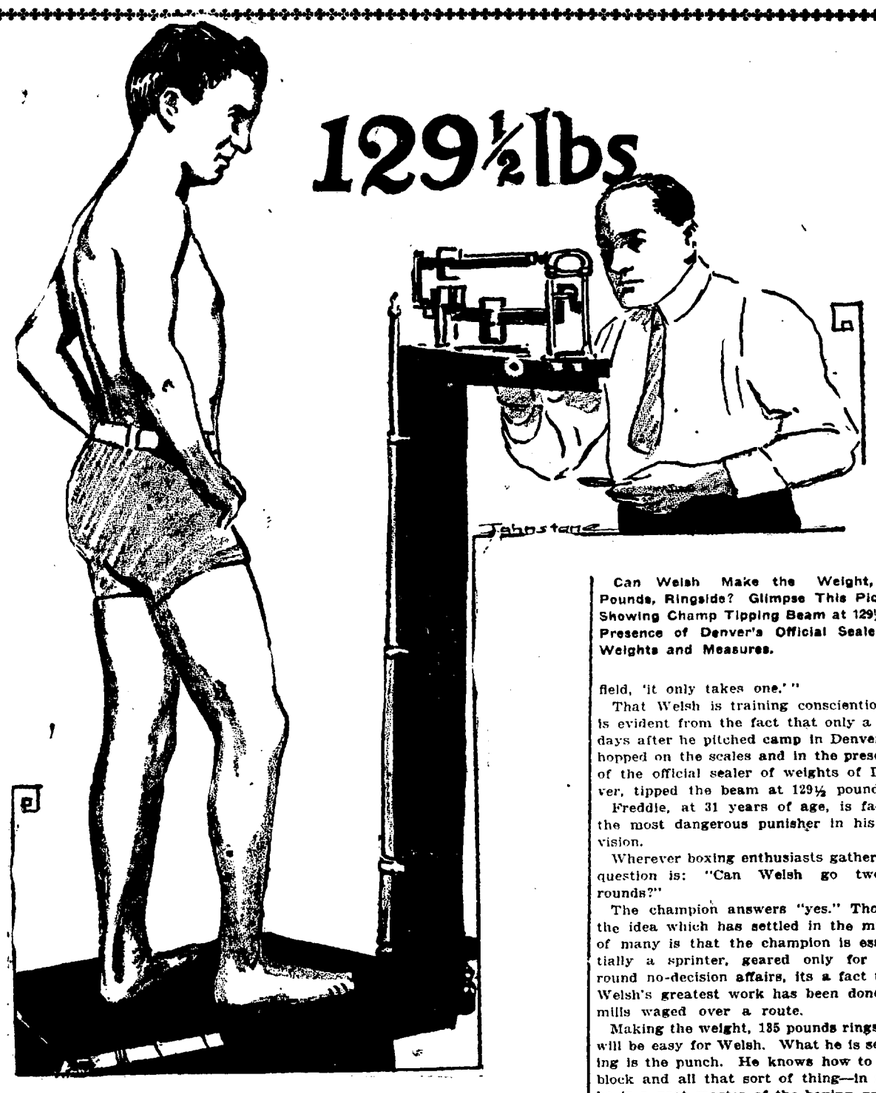
WELSH SAYS HE'LL DAZZLE WHITE WITH HIS SPEED, THEN WEAR HIM DOWN TO A KNOCKOUT!



Can Welsh Make the Weight, 135 Pounds, Ringside? Glimpse This Picture Showing Champ Tipping Beam at 129½ in Presence of Denver's Official Sealer of Weights and Measures.

(By Harold Johnson.)

Speed and ring generalship acquired in more than 150 bouts form the combination Freddie Welsh says will carry him through the lines at Denver Labor day when he defends his lightweight title against Charlie White.

The world's champion, in training at Colorado Springs, realizes the importance of perfect physical condition for the scrap. There's something that suggests seriousness in the attitude he assumes when he dons his gym togs—something even his closest pals never noticed during the last two years.

"Yes, I am serious about this match," said the Briton. "It's the first time in twenty-six months I have gone twenty rounds and naturally I am anxious about it.

"While I believe I can beat White over the route, you must not forget I have a lot of respect for him. He is a heavy hitter and as they say on the baseball field, 'it only takes one.'"

That Welsh is training conscientiously is evident from the fact that only a few days after he pitched camp in Denver he hopped on the scales and in the presence of the official sealer of weights of Denver, tipped the beam at 129½ pounds.

Freddie, at 31 years of age, is facing the most dangerous punisher in his division.

Wherever boxing enthusiasts gather the question is: "Can Welsh go twenty rounds?"

The champion answers "yes." Though the idea which has settled in the minds of many is that the champion is essentially a sprinter, geared only for ten round no-decision affairs, its a fact that Welsh's greatest work has been done in mills waged over a route.

Making the weight, 135 pounds ringside, will be easy for Welsh. What he is seeking is the punch. He knows how to hit, block and all that sort of thing—in fact he is a past master of the boxing game.

But the development of those muscles which place a fighter in the list of "knock 'em dead" gladiators was a trick overlooked by the Briton in his earlier training days. He was always satisfied to win on points.

Welsh believes he can baffle the Chicagoan so completely in a twenty round battle as to make him a mark for a knockout. Hence his desire to work up strength that will enable him to accomplish his ambition.

TENNIS TOURNAMENT MOVES ALONG NICELY

Plogsterth and Popp Look Fine in the City Doubles Play.

The tennis tournament of the city is moving along nicely, with the first round played and some of the second round. The committee is under a handicap because of the play being on so many courts in the city. When the play reaches the semi-finals and finals it will be carried on more swiftly.

Plogsterth and Popp are playing a fine game. Both are above the average tennis players and make some of the so-called sharks look funny when on the courts with them. They will probably win the doubles.

Due to some misunderstanding the schedule failed to arrive at this office. The games were played at Lawton, Weisser and Foster parks.

"Pop" Geers Drives Napoleon to a Victory Over Single G.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 26.—The closing day of the Grand circuit race meeting at North Randall Friday furnished one of the biggest surprises of the meeting when Billy Durfee placed Esperanza, a rank outsider, first in the summary in the 2:06 trot, winning the third and fourth heats after Joan, the favorite, had taken the opening mile, and Director the second. In the other events the favorites had fairly easy going.

"Pop" Geers rode his first winning race of the meeting when, with Napoleon Direct, he took the free-for-all pacing feature. He headed Single G and Hal Boy in three straight heats, but was compelled to step fast, going one last quarter in :27¾.

Ben White drove Lee Axworthy an exhibition mile but only equalled his record of 2:00¼ instead of beating it.

WELSH-WHITE GO TO AID RED CROSS

Colorado Springs, Col., Aug. 26.—Freddie Welsh has instructed Pommery Bolt Vernon, the stakeholder in the Welsh-White contest here on Labor day, to turn over all money derived from the champion's share in the moving pictures to the Red Cross fund of Great Britain. It is probable that the fund will thus be enriched to the extent of several thousand dollars.

Welsh yesterday asked Lloyd's for a rate of insurance on each of his ten digits for $2,000 until the day of the fight, and the insurance bug Friday took possession of the noodle of Eddie Pitts, who arranged the match. He has opened negotiations for $100,000 insurance against rain on the day of the fight. He probably would pay only a small premium, as the likelihood of rain at that time in this vicinity is slight.

Both Welsh and White are donating to local hospitals 25 per cent of admissions the fans are paying to see the boys work out daily at Temple theater.

A surprise was sprung on Manager Pitts this morning when a prominent society woman of Colorado Springs requested that a certain section be set aside for women fight fans, and showing her own earnest intention by purchasing fifty seats to be used by a club of which she is a member. Acting on her suggestion Pitts has blocked off 300 seat for women, or women accompanied by male escorts.

One Minute Talks with Ballplayers

JOE TINKER, MANAGER CHICAGO CUBS:

Look for the Red Sox and Phillies to meet again this fall in the world's series. I like the Phillies because they play like champions. Every man knows what the other is going to do and that is valuable on a team.

"Besides, Cravath, Luderus and Bancroft have started to hit. They did not bat early in the season and if they had I think the Phillies would have had the pennant cinched by now.

"Moran has three great pitchers in form in Alexander, Demaree and Rixey. I figure that each can pitch in about nine of the remaining forty games and each win six or more. That speed ought to settle the race."

GEORGE KELLY, NEW YORK GIANTS:

"It's sometimes hard to live down a name or a relationship. I don't mean to infer when I make this statement that I am sorry I am the nephew of Bill Lange, but you know when you are the nephew of one of the greatest stars the game ever produced you are more apt to be in the public eye while there is a lot more expected of you.

"No matter where I happen to be somebody invariably points me out with the illuminating remark: 'That's Bill Lange's nephew.' But I'm going to stick to baseball and hope some day to make a name for myself just as did Uncle Bill."

RELIGION, TEMPERANCE AND HEALTH

The Heart That is Kind Brings Blessed Lesson

How an Immigrant Boy Was Transformed Merely by the Love of a Dog.

(BY LOUISE H. GUYOL.)

Late one dark night, in a distant country, a dark-haired, low-browed man crept through a dingy, narrow street, keeping close to the high, grim walls, choosing to walk in the deepest shadows. Reaching the place that he called home, he kicked open the door, entered the room, closed the door and proceeded to rouse his sleeping family, consisting of wife and son and daughter, with more kicks and blows and curses. Having done this he turned again to his half-awakened wife and with another kick and blow, both of which the latter fortunately dodged, he savagely commanded:

"Pack up the things!"

"What have you done now?" his wife asked.

Another kick was all that she got for an answer. Silently she went about the packing of their things. The operation consisted of throwing upon the floor a shawl so brightly striped that it made a weird bit of inanimate gaiety in the dingy room. Into the shawl the woman tossed their few belongings, knotted the four corners together and then glanced inquiringly at her husband. He nodded his head, and she raised the bundle to her stooped shoulders.

"Get out!" the man ordered, with a kick for each of the three as they passed through the doorway.

"Come on!" he muttered, striding ahead. The two children and the woman followed father and husband through narrow, evil alleyways, around wicked, dark corners, through the lengths of lonely streets, until they came to a wharf. They followed him aboard a steamer, and down into the loneliest, darkest corner of the shadowy steerage deck.

"What have you done now?" the woman again inquired, when it was late into the night, and all were asleep except the huddled, fear-stricken family.

The man spat and made answer.

"I killed a man," he said.

"Another?"

His next answer was the equivalent of our matter of fact "of course." "I had to get away," he continued. "They were after me. He had money—today's man did."

The boy, lying near, heard him. The little girl heard him, and the parents knew that their children had heard, but an understanding having been reached the man and his wife turned, and went to sleep.

So, fleeing from justice, the family came to America and, among many of their kind, made their home in a crowded quarter of a big city. There, until the boy was about fourteen and the little girl about nine, the father worked when he chose, and drank when he chose. He usually chose to drink and he beat his wife and his children.

Then, one merciful day, he died.

His widow wept and his little daughter wept, echoing her mother's loud grief. But Antonio, the dead man's son stepped forth, seeking work.

The work was hard but the wages fair and the boy handed all that he earned to his mother. She, in turn, paid the rent and bought their food. With what was left, she purchased clothes. There were few clothes bought. She knew that Antonio gave her all that he earned, and he knew that she spent no penny in which he did not share. But life had meant to mother and son naught but combat and defense, so she tormented the boy because he did not bring home more money, and he defied her because she gave him so little to eat, and he was so hungry.

As is ever the way with the youthful mind, the world spelled to Tony what home had always spelled, the only difference lying in the fact that the world gave a bigger fighting ground, and a greater advantage of things to dodge. So, even as he had fought and dodged in the tiny room that was home, he dodged and fought in the big, outside world. When he did not succeed in dodging he was haled to the juvenile tribunal and sentenced, according to the weight of his offense.

"If you would only learn not to fight so much, Tony," the kind judge once told him. "You're not a bad boy, son. You've never been here for stealing, and I do not believe you have ever told me a lie. Can't you learn not to fight quite so much?"

"What else kin I do?" the boy asked, sullenly.

Before Tony's question was answered a lady rose in the court room. She was a representative of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. "May I have the boy?" she asked the judge. "If you will parole him I will stand sponsor for him."

And fifteen minutes later Tony started home, having in leash a little dog that the lady had given him.

The dog's name was Dixie.

As the days went by, slowly, but none the less surely, something hard, as hard and cruel as the things that his father had been wont to throw at him, seemed to be melting from Tony's breast. Slowly but surely in its place was growing something different—something gentle and glad, like the pawings and lickings of the little black and white dog who leaped gleefully to meet him every evening when he went home.

The world seems different to Tony. It is no longer a big place in which there is nothing to do but to fight and to dodge. The light of vague, new ideas has dawned in his brain, routing the black shades of his past.

And as with Tony, so with his family, for in that home a wonderful transformation has taken place, the old order of things has given away to a new and better one. With the advent of Dixie came one who did not throw things; who did not nag; who did not strike back when he was struck (he never was struck but once, then the sudden, surprised look that sprang in his eyes had forever afterwards the effect of miraculously controlling the inate cruelty of the superstitious, ignorant woman who had struck him); and whose devotion was as strong at the end of the month when food was scarce, as it was immediately after pay-day when there was nothing to eat, comparatively.

Today, one year since Dixie became Tony's companion, a new life is growing in that little room, in the crowded quarter of the great city where a family who had never heard of kindness nor justice nor mercy, and who had known naught but crime and cruelty, are at last learning these blessed lessons—and their teacher is a little half-breed dog —Our Dumb Animals.

BLESSED TO BE A BLESSING.

God blesses you that you may be a blessing to others. Then he blesses you a second time in being a blessing to others. It is the talent that is used that multiplies. Receiving, unless one gives in turn, makes one full and proud and selfish. Give out the best of your life in the Master's name for the good of others. Lend a hand to every one who needs. Be ready to serve at any cost those who require your service. Seek to be a blessing to every one who comes for but a moment under your influence. This is to be angel-like. It is to be God-like. It is to be Christlike. We are in this world to be useful. God wants to pass His gifts and blessings through us to others. When we fail as His messengers we fail of our mission.—J. R. Miller, D. D.

"THE INTERESTS OF THE CITY"

"That fellow makes me tired," said our millionaire friend at lunch recently. He referred to a young man who had been carrying on an animated conversation with somebody at a neighboring table. All we heard of the talk was that something or other was "demanded by the business interests of the city." It had something to do with liquor licenses, or gambling hells or Sunday saloons. "The truth is," continued our business friend, whose commercial relations reach five continents, "men of real value to a community, whose industries furnish employment for thousands of hands, know that nothing which ruins the citizen will benefit the city. The 'professional business man' is like the 'professional laboring man,' an arrant humbug. The prosperity of the city mainly depends upon precisely the same habits and customs and laws as the prosperity of the individual, and the real business men of any city know it."—Pacific.

The Liquor Question

Individual fitness calls for temperance. National preparedness, which includes individual fitness in every citizen, assuredly demands prohibition and abolition of the beverage liquor traffic. Is this logic? For the answer look to nations now at war and study their recent policies. Contemplate Russia, reincarnated and renewed after doing away with vodka, her chief national evil. Look at France, gloriously sustaining her finest traditions after abolishing her greatest evil, absinthe. See Great Britain restricting the liquor traffic, her "worst foe," and rising to heights of efficiency not before attained. In this country it is only necessary to look into the conduct and policies of our largest and most important industries and business concerns to find that as efficiency has been made paramount liquor and the drinker of booze have been barred. Where the public safety is in question the drinker has no chance and should have no chance for employment. Where responsibility is to be assumed the habitual drinker finds he is on the outside vainly looking in. Truly the prime requisite of personal preparedness is total abstinence, and one real need of national preparedness is the abolition of alcoholic beverages. This is not politics nor partisanship. It is sheer common sense based on honest experience. It does not mean malice toward any citizen nor abuse of those who uphold the existing system. It means simply the old order has proved to be potent chiefly for evil, and that the bad should give way to that which is better. All change should be hedged about with justice and logic no less than wholesome sentiment. In its essence the abolition of the beverage liquor traffic must be both sound and sane in methods as well as in aims. The movement against the liquor traffic is gaining today because the people are awakening to the reason and sanity of its wholesome demands.—Indiana Daily Times.

The Heavenly Home

A mother carefully shielded her little son from knowledge of, or contact with death. She dreaded the day when he should ask her questions concerning the great mystery. She feared that she might not know how to answer his questions wisely and that word of hers might shock or estrange him from her or from God. She did, however, take her boy to Sunday school, to the beginners' department. At Easter he heard a story about Jesus and the heavenly home. One day they were on the streets when a lady passed who attracted the child's attention. She had silvery white hair.

She walked with slow and faltering steps. The little lad looked after her, then turned and said to his mother: "She is a heaven lady."

"A heaven lady?" repeated the mother and asked: "What do you mean?"

"Why, don't you know?" asked the child. "She is old, and soon she will be going to the heavenly home. She is a heaven lady."

The mother stood amazed at the power of a child to understand great truths when they are presented in a way the little child can understand, and she talked with him about death and dying. He told her what he thought. To die meant "going away." Heaven was the beautiful country to which some day "fathers and mothers and children are going." It was "just the sort of home children will like, because it is bright and shining," with no night there and no crying, because "the Heavenly Father and Jesus are there, taking care of everybody and making them happy." As mother and child turned toward home her heart rejoiced.

NOT FOR SALE.

Some folks think that the only things in the world that have value are the things one can handle and buy and sell. There are things that are not on the market. They are not for sale, and they cannot be bought. The Church stands for value. It counts its assets not in the amount of money its members possess, but in the character they possess. Money may pass, and business fail, and houses burn, but character will last through eternity. This is what Jesus was talking about all the time. Salvation through Christ's blood will be manifested in character. Character cannot be bought; it is what a man is. The Church deals with the timeless and the eternal verities. Reputation is what we think a man is, but character is what he is. That is a wide difference. The Church stands for the noblest, the best. Let us give ourselves to the real meaning of Christ and the Church, and welcome with all our hearts that gospel which brings uplift and cleanness of soul and heart. Let us welcome it into our hearts, so that we may be, in fact, the children of God.

PRAY MORE.

The great lack of our lives is that we do not pray more. And there is no failure so disastrous or criminal as this. It is very difficult to account for it. If, in all times of discouragement and vicissitudes we could have access to one of the wisest and noblest of our fellow creatures or to some venerated departed saint or to the guardian angel deputed to attend our steps, how strong and brave we should become! Whatever our needs, we would at once seek His august presence and obtain his counsel and assistance. How extraordinary is our behavior, then, with respect to prayer and that we make so little of our opportunities of access into the presence of our Father, in whom wisdom, power, and love blend perfectly and who is always willing to hear us—nay, is perpetually urging us to come. "This is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask according to to his will, he heareth us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desire of him.—Vanguard.

"DRINK YE ALL OF IT."

HOUSES SHOULD KEEP HEAT OUT AND HEALTH IN.

If you would keep in health, build your house to keep out heat.

The man who wants to keep well now gives as much attention to this problem as he does to keeping out the cold in wintertime.

For a number of years the question of insulating dwellings against heat has been studied by German sanitarians and scientists, with the result that houses are now being built and so constructed as to afford material immunity from excessive heat. Think what this will mean to the crowded city dweller.

A study of pneumonia death rates shows that there are comparatively few deaths caused by cold. It would seem then more important to protect dwellers from heat than cold.

The ramshackle building, of course, is no protection against either. There can be no question but people should be properly housed. This means protection from the weather be they what they may.

Properly insulating the walls and the foundations of dwellings, so as to afford material protection from excessive heat, would also mean protection against cold in the winter, and reduction in fuel bills.

In tropical countries where the United States public health service is in charge, it insists upon ratproof dwellings as a protection against bubonic plague.

It is quite within the possibilities that within the near future in large cities sanitation legislation will provide laws for the proper protection of city dwellers from the dangers and discomforts of torrid summers when adults suffer and babies die by the thousands.

Rocking.

A common fault in caring for babies is permitting them to be violently rocked or jumped up and down on the knee.

Constant, violent motion of this kind upsets a baby's stomach and disturbs the nervous system. It is particularly apt to do so during the hot summer weather when baby's stomach at best is a little squeamish.

As a mother should immediately consult a physician if her baby is sick instead of trying to treat it herself, unless it be a simple matter with which she is familiar, it is well for the mother to know the signs which indicate that baby is not well.

An ailing baby is not inclined to smile, is restless and cross, with dull heavy eyes.

It is feverish and does not sleep well.

In warm weather it is well to remember that baby is thirsty just as you are. Give him plenty of cooled boiled water to drink.

On hot days in addition to the daily bath, sponge him off two or three times more. It helps to keep him well and comfortable.

Start early to teach baby regular habits in regard to eating, sleeping and bowel movements. Such habits are of utmost importance in keeping baby well especially in summer when heat makes trouble for most infants.

Hay Fever.

Hay fever cures seem to be a matter of personal taste.

At this time of year every sneezer hauls forth his pet cure and between kerchoos lauds its virtues to the skies. It is rare, however, to find any two who agree upon "cures."

Physicians and a great majority of the victims of this annual ailment know it is caused by wind-pollinated weeds, that is, weeds whose fluffy, light pollen is blown about on the breeze. These weeds are many, including species of rag-weed, cocklebur, fleabane and many grasses.

Pollen from these weeds has an exceedingly irritating effect upon the delicate membrane or lining of the air passages of susceptible persons. It creates a condition in the human system similar to that which causes hives.

Science so far has been unable to make use of this knowledge concerning the ailment to effect cures or prevent the affliction.

Some sufferers are apparently cured or at least greatly relieved by a change of climate, but this treatment does not benefit all victims. Others find great relief in using cotton plugs in the nostrils, which act as filters, but again this is of little value for others. Serums made from pollens help in some cases, but not all.

Some find relief by cutting starch and sugar from the diets.

People frequently submit to an operation on the nose in effort to find relief.

It is now generally agreed, however, that the best preventive is to keep weeds on vacant lots cut often enough to prevent their flowering. Members of the hay fever association, an organization of brethren in distress, devote considerable effort on an annual "cut-the-weeds" campaign.

Many American cities now have ordinances, which they enforce, compelling citizens and heads of business houses to see that weeds are cut regularly on vacant lots adjoining private residences or places of business. New Orleans has taken the lead in such civic campaigns.

THE LIBERTY WORTH HAVING.

One of Mr. Moody's stories was to the effect that at one time he was talking with a gentleman who told him of an experience he had in the south. As a young man, just graduated from Yale, he accepted a position as teacher in Mississippi. On one occasion he was walking with a companion along a country road, when he came to a sign, saying, "Liberty, forty miles." Just then an old slave came along the road, and the young men thought they would have some fun. They stopped him, and asked him what the signpost said. The aged negro shook his head and said: "De ole slave don't read in dis yer country." "Well," they replied, "that post says it is only forty miles to Liberty." If it's that near, why don't you go there?" The old slave smiled sadly as he answered:

"Dat ar's a sham, young Massa, but if it pointed up dar," raising his trembling hand toward heaven, "to de liberty wherewith Christ makes us free, dat ar woudn't be no sham." The old slave, with all his ignorance, had experienced in his own soul a liberty of which the young men knew nothing.

Ten Minutes With a Corrupt Mayor.

A young pastor had just taken charge of a church in a city of 25,000 population. He was eager for work, but he was amazed when some of the leaders in the church told him they felt it was his duty to attack the city government in his sermons or otherwise.

"The mayor is a disgrace to the city, his department chiefs are like himself, and the members of the council are followers of evil. The city is famous for the corruption in high places. You must do something."

However, the young pastor declined to move until he became better acquainted with the situation. He wished to make no mistake, so he waited with open eyes.

The time came when he felt he must act. But he did not preach a sermon directed at the mayor and his associates, no did he rush into print. After prayer for guidance, he called the mayor on the telephone and asked for an appointment.

"I want ten minutes of your time," he said.

Next morning the minister was shown into the office of the mayor, who looked him over with some curiosity. Evidently he wondered what could be the errand of his visitor.

"Pardon me if I look at my watch," the minister said. "I must keep my promise to leave the office in ten minutes."

Then, after a few moments of general conversation, he stated his errand: "I want to congratulate you on the honor and responsibility that were laid on you when you were chosen mayor of this city. But I want to tell you that there is a greater honor waiting for you —something far bigger than the office of mayor of a city like this."

The heart of the mayor bounded. He thought of possible political preferment; he had dreamed of this. Could this stranger be the emissary of some powerful politician?

Curiously he listened to the next words of the visitor: "You ought to be a servant of the Lord Jesus Christ."

In astonishment the official replied: "No one ever spoke to me like this before."

The pastor rose, looked at his watch and held out his hand. "I must go," he said; "time is up."

Next day there was a call at the minister's telephone; the mayor asked for him. "Won't you come and talk to me?" he asked, his voice giving evidence of his agitation. "I have thought of what you said to me ever since you left. I must see you!"

Two weeks later the mayor united with the church of which the minister was pastor. But the work did not stop there. The chief of police, the head of the fire department and five aldermen confessed Christ, and became church members.

Then the government of the city was cleaned up. The work the officers of his new charge had demanded of the young minister had been done, but not in the way they had planned.—John T. Faris, D. D., in the Sunday School Times.

An Engineer's Story; Isn't This Worth While?

Railroad Man Tells of His Battle With Satan and of Help He Now Finds Ever Present.

(By Henry W. Adams.)

I am a locomotive engineer, and was wonderfully converted about thirteen years ago. For the first four or five months I was so blessed and joyful that everything seemed new. I was so full of joy I was just glad to do anything for Jesus Christ.

But one morning I awoke from my sleep and found that my joy was gone. My besetting sin had been to get out of patience, and I would almost go crazy and do things that I would be sorry for afterward. Well, this morning I was late getting up, and the enemy told me I could keep my religion and tell my wife that it was her fault we were late; but I bit my lip and said nothing. I hurried to my work, only to find that some one had stolen part of my tools, and again the devil told me I could have religion and tell the dispatcher some things; but I held my peace.

When we got the engine ready, the conductor, having had some words with the yardmaster, began to take his spite out by abusing me. Again the devil wanted me to tell him a few things, but I held back until, in going about my work, it seemed that every signal that conductor gave me was a curse, and I could stand it no longer. The devil kept saying, "Go and give him a piece of your mind," and finally I called the fireman to come and take the engine, and I got down with the intention of having a regular fight with the conductor. But the Spirit of the Lord got hold of me, and I ran to the river bank, which was about two rods away; and there, under the trunk of a tree that was lying under the bank, I hid myself and cried my heart out to the Lord. He heard my cry and commenced talking with me, and I began to consecrate my life to Him: my wife, my children, my position, my talents, my money, my time, myself, all to the glory of God; and when the consecration was complete there came into my soul a peace and a joy which was "unspeakable and full of glory," and ever since that time, in every test, and in every trial, amid persecution and tribulation, this joy has remained.

Sometimes it manifests itself in praises to God until I feel this old world cannot hold me long; and again, when the devil is raging, it comes in a calm rest that makes me feel that my Christ is able to make a way for me where there is no way; and all the time I have this joy which is my strength welling up in my soul.

The bible says, "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." Praise the Lord forever. Yes, and the Lord took care of my job while I was settling it. It took me about two hours to settle it and make a complete consecration, but God took care of my interests while I was doing it.

While I write, the thought of God's love and mercy to me makes me rejoice and feel safe in his hands.

How to Believe

Faith always acts without effort. If we find that it requires an effort for us to exert our faith, this is because we have lost our faith. Faith never has to "try" to be faith; the moment it tries, it ceases to be faith. If we say to a friend, "I am going to try to believe in you," those very words declare that we do not believe in him. We do not have to try to believe in one in whom we have confidence. The facts that we know about the life of a really trusted friend are such that our faith in him acts without effort or trying on our part; it is spontaneous, automatic. So of our faith in Christ. When we are trying to trust Him to meet our needs, we are distrusting Him. The way to get over this failure of effort-making faith, which is not faith at all, is to face the facts about Christ. It is what we know of the facts of a friend's character and life that makes our faith in him spontaneous and instinctive. When we stop to think who Christ is, what the perfection of His character is, what are the sufficiency and completeness of His saving and keeping work, then we forget all about our faith in our unconscious confidence and satisfaction in the Perfection at which we are looking. To have a great faith, we need only face our great Christ.—S. S. Times.

Putting on Christ.

Victor David Brener, who put the face of Lincoln on the penny, preferred the penny to the half-dollar. Why? Just because Lincoln's face on the penny would jingle in the pockets of more people—those common people of whom Lincoln said: "God must love the common people, because He made so many of them." The Lincoln penny represents more than an artistic or commercial triumph. Brener's ideal was to make Lincoln's face on the penny reveal so much of the heart of the great president that even a discouraged laborer might find comfort from the last penny in his pocket by looking upon the face of Lincoln.

Paul tells us to put on Christ. The Christian's duty—yes, the Christian's joy—is to imprint the face of Christ on human hearts. It does not take the greatest preacher or prophet to accomplish it. The humblest disciple may perform this crowning work.

The Word is Truth.

The Word of God is the miracle of all ages. It meets the needs of every generation, it is never out of date and never outgrown; its truths are never proved to be merely provincially attitudes and opinions, but it is, for all men in all lands in all centuries, the one infallible storehouse of eternal truth. No partisan and prejudiced assertions are contained in it, no statements that contradict true science, and no teachings that traverse the truth. Men have sometimes misapplied and misunderstood its teachings, but the words of Jesus, in His intercessory prayer to the Father for His people, as recorded by John, have stood through all centuries: "Thy Word is Truth." There is much to provoke thought in the saying: "The Bible is not a book containing a revelation; but the Bible is a revelation taking the risk of a book."—Exchange.

GETTING RIGHT WITH MEN.

Our bitter feeling toward any human being means defeat in every part of our life. We cannot be right with God while we are wrong with a fellow-man; only the lives that are right with God are winning lives. That is a striking word in a letter from Dan Crawford, the African missionary: "What a settling of old scores there is when the blood of the cross cleanseth away all crookedness between a man and a man, as well as a man and his God. Your straight, strapping African can often be crooked enough; but here we have the change; and now you have a man who is straight of back as well as straight of life, who believes the new doctrine that no man treats Christ well who treats his brother wrong."—S. S. Times.

ON TIME.

Every unnecessary delay is a defeat. So it is a sin. We can be completely forgiven as we confess the sin; but this forgiveness does not get the delayed matter done on time. That traditional reply of Alexander the Great, quoted in a recent "Illustration Round Table," of The Sunday School Times, ought to be engraved deeply in the heart of every Christian. Asked how he was always victorious, the great military genius replied, "Simply by not delaying." We cannot conceive of Jesus, when He was here in the flesh, as ever being late in the doing of a duty. Always victorious. He never delayed. What a revolutionizing change not delaying would bring into the lives of most of us! Shall we start this new victory today?—S. S. Times.

NATURE'S SOFT DRINK.

Nature as a soft drink manufacturer has them all beat.

Her materials are the rain, the dew, the sand, and the sun.

By a mystical chemistry which puts that of the white-aproned men with test-tubes to shame, she works for months and has ready for man in the days that are dryest and hottest the bright-colored drink that will quench his thirst.

We shall answer our riddle by given you another which you may have answered as a child:

"I came to the party in my green dress and they said I was just 'showing off.'

"I came in my white dress, and they said they didn't like it.

"I came in my black dress, and they cast me aside.

"But when I came in my red dress, they picked me up and kissed me."

In the middle of a hot afternoon when the thirst for the artificial "soft drinks" comes upon you, step into a lunch room and order a slice of watermelon.

There's not as much food in it as there is in an ice cream soda. It's a drink, nature's soft drink.

FRENCH AIRMEN FIGHT LIKE HAWKS

JEAN NAVARRE

Aeroplane Battles Are Being Fought at Greater Altitude Since Aviators of Allies Wage War Alone.

IT is a man to man fight in the air now in the war in Europe—one man battling with another, just one man to each aeroplane. Combined attacks by squadrons of fliers will be made, but the fighting above the clouds will be done by the dare-devils who fly alone and who will in the future convoy the bomb-laden planes.

The German has shown the world what one man can do, what the individual can accomplish in the way of embarrasing a big battleship, what one converted cruiser can do in the way of fighting a nation. But it has been left to the French to show that one man is better than two in air fighting.

Pierre Navarre, the pride of the French nation, has done it. He is only a boy, with the fear of death so far removed from his manly heart that even his swift, new Nieuport, his especially designed single-seat biplane couldn't catch it if it tried.

There is one thing harder than the capture of Verdun, and that is to get an aviator to tell of his exploits. If he fails in his exploit, he never comes back alive. If he does come back he is a hero, and these war aviators are modest heroes with many medals of bravery pinned to their coats. But their officer, never stop sounding their praise, and this is the story as it is being told in Paris about Pierre Navarre, twin brother Jean, and others.

Formerly Pierre and Jean carried gunners in their parasol monoplanes. The twins did the driving and the diving, the gunners attended to the firing. Then one day Pierre suddenly became angry at a Fokker which he was trying to dislodge from a cloud and dove straight down upon it. The gunner was so startled he forgot to use his disc of forty bullets and the Fokker escaped.

"I'll do my own shooting," Pierre announced, and was provided with a single seat and a gun mounted forward.

"I'll be swifter than they," he explained. "I'll have less weight. I'll be able to mount higher and can run in, fire and loop out so quickly the Fokkers won't know what to do."

His argument proved true. The other day he was surrounded by six Fokkers inside the German lines. They were on every side of him and on top and below.

"The Sudden Loop Threw the German Officer Into Space."

He waited until they maneuvered closer, then he suddenly made three little loops and found himself close to one, with all the other five behind him. None of the enemy could fire upon him without hitting some of their own machines. He shot down one of the Fokkers and escaped from the others by diving, looping and speeding.

"The secret is never to be in a rush until the proper time," Pierre told his commanding officer. "An aviator should never use his machine gun until he knows that he is going to hit what he is aiming at."

Pierre's advice should be good. He has been flying six months and has fought forty duels in the air, mostly alone. He has nineteen notches on his machine gun. The air men of the allies have ethics all their own in counting their victims. They agree that they shall count only those that fall within the allies' lines, and those that fall within the enemy's lines, which are officially verified. Originally they counted only those that fell within their own lines, but with the advent of the Fokkers, which were forbidden to leave the German lines for fear their secret would be revealed, the French more and more took to crossing over to the enemy's air for battle.

Pierre's heart and soul is in his work of duelling. Early before daybreak he is in his machine napping, ready to dart into the clouds at the first warning that an enemy flyer is approaching. One morning recently he was dosing in his seat. The weather was bad, and although the look-out for aeroplanes was kept as vigilant as ever, no one expected an air raid that day.

Pierre was away and into the sky before the officer could give the command. The two machines met above the River Marne. Pierre dashed in to 30 yards of the enemy and fired twelve balls at the birdman. They all hit the motor and down came the German within the French lines. The German was promptly captured by the soldiers and Pierre soon returned unhurt.

"See?" he said. "I'd rather fight them by myself. It's quicker work."

"You see," he told the officer, "the only way to fight the German airman is to confuse him. You must fall suddenly, dance on one wing and then on the other, loop the loop, tumble hundreds of yards at a time, dash in, circle the enemy, flurry around, flutter like you are hit, dart up, then down, dumfound the German and shoot him."

The gunners were not particularly put out because this boy of nerve did not want them along.

Pierre and several like him are waging a terrible war on the enemy. A German flier knows that when he meets a French boy he will have to fight to the death, and then probably not escape. For instance, in March a year ago, so Paris tells, Pierre's brother shot away all of his fireballs and bullets.

The German, an Albatross, hung on, and Jean made it a personal matter. He transformed himself and machine into a hawk and lit on the enemy feet first, literally tearing it into shreds with his dive. Both landed safely, but the German got a touch of warfare in mid-air that no doubt set him thinking.

Now it has become a fight to the finish always, one way or another. Jean the other day, before he suffered two rifle balls in his shoulder and was sent to the American hospital, gave combat to a Fokker containing two men, the aviator and the gunner. A broadside put the French machine gun out of commission. Turning, the French boy cut off the tail of the enemy machine with his propeller blade.

The enemy was dashed to death. Jean, in tumbling through the air from the recoil of the "pesonal" attack, decided that his propeller was shattered and his engine dead. He quietly but quickly righted his "baby," as he calls his aeroplane, and volplaned to his own lines.

In order for one man to fly an aeroplane and fight at the same time, it is necessary, in the first place, to risk his life before he fires a bullet. Pierre has arranged the machine so that he must stand up, let go of his steering apparatus, fire and regain control of the machine, all at the most critical moment.

"It is this way," he explained while begging for permission to fight his battles alone. "You got to dart around up there.

Since the attack on Verdun began and the one-man policy of fighting in the air has proven efficient and popular, the air battles have been waged mostly at between 9000 and 12,000 feet altitude. A year ago they were fighting at between 3000 and 4000 feet.

If death can be turned into a comedy, the airmen of France will do it. They are still telling about a commander who went so high above the clouds that he lost all sense of direction, despite his air compass, and finally alighted behind the German lines in a fog.

Surrounded by soldiers before he could get away, the commander was strapped to his seat and a German officer climbed on to one wing.

"Now take me over the French lines and fly low. Here's my revolver, and if you attempt to alight I will kill you and pilot the machine myself."

The commander complied. He flew up and down the French trenches. The German divided his attention between the pilot and the enemy below.

"I have seen enough; return to the German lines," the captor ordered.

The Frenchman, so Paris says, turned toward the enemy's camp. He suddenly mounted higher, then as quickly turned a double loop. Strapped in, the Frenchman was safe. The German officer flew off into space and to death below. The Frenchman then returned to his own lines.

FIFTEENTH INSTALLMENT

SYNOPSIS.

Lieut. Jarvis Hope reports findings on the invention of Dr. Ralph Burke. On the trial trip of the inventor's boat, a Japanese helper is surprised in the act of examining the mechanism. Attempt to burglarize Burke's laboratory fails; later his daughter Cleo finds him murdered in his bedroom. Cleo sells her father's books; she finds a note from which she learns they contain secret formula. Olga Ivanoff and Gerald Morton, spies in search of formula, attempt to capture Cleo. Hope rushes to her aid. Hope and Cleo escape and attend ball at Mrs. Delmar's, whose nephew has two missing books. Mahlin, a spy, attempts to steal books. Hope and Cleo take boat for an island. After a violent storm Hope and Cleo arrive on strange island and discover man they hunt is there. Mahlin and Japanese also reach the island. They escape from Hope but return and dynamite the shack. Hope and Cleo manage to reach Sandsboro, where Doctor Owen has one of the books. He arranges to meet Hope at the hotel with book. Morton poses as Hope and but for an earthquake would have possessed the volume. Cleo is captured by Morton and taken to cabin in the mountains. She finds there book for which they search. Fortunately she gets note to Hope, who, with Hook, starts to rescue. As he crosses chasm on swinging cable Mahlin steals up and chops at cable with an ax. Hook appears in time to save Hope. He reaches the other side and is greeted by Cleo; she swears her love to him. They are followed by Mahlin and Jap who attempt to kidnap Cleo. She swings herself over the canyon. Olga and Morton are dashed to earth in an aeroplane. Hope and Cleo are pulled from quicksands by Hook and a grapevine. Mahlin and Satsuma are called before the Black Council. On the track of another book, they find the owner has lost it. Hope receives a letter demanding his marriage to a girl who claims he compromised her. He is forced to comply by Cleo. Accidentally he learns it is a plot to rope him in. He is later summoned to Washington. Morton and Olga are cared for by a rancher who warns them against Carillo the bandit. They venture too far from the ranch and are captured by the outlaws. Carillo offers Morton his freedom for ransom. Olga finds one of the books in the cabin. She kills Carillo and escapes, but Morton takes the book from her and flees. Hope learns that Cleo is the daughter and heir of Calvin Montgomery, Gerald Morton's uncle. He finds her in Sacramento. Olga traces Morton to his room where she confronts him. An attempt to kill him ends in her death at his hands. Cleo is kidnaped from the hotel, while Hope is away.

"I am Miss Burke," said Cleo, addressing the driver of the closed taxicab which she found standing at the curb in front of her hotel. "Is this the car Lieutenant Hope sent for me?"

"Yes'm," replied the man, a short, thickset fellow, whose features were effectually concealed by the upturned collar of his coat, a pair of goggles and a visored cap which was pulled well down over his face. "He said I was to drive you to the Cliff house and he'd meet you there."

The most direct route to the Cliff house leads through Golden Gate park. Instead of keeping to the main thoroughfare, however, the driver, when well into the park, turned down one of the innumerable branch drives, which, owing to the greater intervals between its lamps, was comparatively dark, and brought his vehicle to an abrupt halt in the dense shadow of an immense live oak. The car had barely stopped before the door was flung open, a man sprang inside, a revolver was pushed into Cleo's face and a hoarse voice warned her, "Not a sound, Miss Burke, if you value your life." Almost simultaneously the driver threw open the other door, and in an instant the terrified girl was securely bound and gagged and the car sped away.

When the car finally stopped, the man beside her threw open the door, and, aided by the driver, removed the gag and untied the cords with which she was bound, but the circulation had been checked so long that her limbs refused to support her and her captors had to assist her to the ground. There was no moon, but by the faint light of the stars she made out that they had stopped in the shadow of a low, windowless building, evidently a storehouse of some sort, at the end of a long and disused pier,

This much she had time to see before her captors, unlocking the door of the storehouse, half led, half pushed her inside. The feeble light of the lantern revealed the evil, cruel faces of Mahlin and Satsuma.

It was Mahlin who broke the silence.

"We have brought you here in order to ask you some questions, Miss Burke," he began, politely enough, but the look in his eyes belied the suavity of his tone. "If you answer them truthfully you will not be harmed.

"I want to know," he said, advancing until his face was within a few inches of hers and fixing her with his steely eyes, "what you have done with the book on metallurgy?"

"I . . . I don't know what you mean," she stammered.

"Yes you do," snarled Mahlin. "You know the book I mean—the one that that doctor handed you in the restaurant at Sandsboro, just before the earthquake."

"Oh, that book," said Cleo, obviously surprised. "But there was nothing in it—no formula, I mean."

"No matter about the formula," said Mahlin roughly. "Where is the book now? Who has it?"

"I suppose Lieutenant Hope has it," she answered. "At least he brought it back with him from Sandsboro, though I haven't seen it since."

"Are you telling me the truth?" demanded Mahlin, seizing her by the shoulder and staring at her so closely that she quailed.

"Of course I'm telling you the truth," she answered with spirit.

"I'm going to find out if you are," he answered, moving toward the door. "God help you if you have lied to me, young woman. If you have you'll wish that you had never been born."

"Come along, Satsuma," he called to the Japanese. "We must be getting back to town."

When Hope, returning to the hotel with Johnstone, learned from the clerk that Cleo had left an hour before, so frantic was the young officer with anxiety and grief that for a time the lawyer feared for his sanity.

But, despite his grief, he neglected nothing which might lead to Cleo's rescue. He promptly communicated with the police and within an hour a score of plain-clothes men were scouring the city.

"We're doing everything in our power, Mr. Hope," the chief of police assured him. "I have fifty men working on the case now, but it looks to me like a clean get-away."

As Hope was leaving police headquarters a patrol wagon backed up to the curb and out of it scrambled two policemen escorting a tall and fashionably dressed young man on whose wrists glittered handcuffs.

"Great heavens!" he exclaimed; "it's Gerald Morton."

Following Morton and his guards into the station, Hope beckoned to the inspector who was on duty.

"What is he charged with?" he asked, indicating Morton.

"Murder," the inspector answered laconically. "Stabbed a woman."

"Do you know who she was?" asked Hope, his heart momentarily standing still as he thought of the missing Cleo.

"She claimed to be a Russian countess," was the answer. "Her name was Ivanoff—Olga Ivanoff."

Hope gave a prolonged whistle of surprise.

"Is she dead?" he demanded.

"Yes," was the reply.

"Is there any objection to my having a word with him?" asked Hope.

"Not in the least," said the inspector, and ordered a patrolman to bring the prisoner into his office.

"Hello, lieutenant," remarked Morton, nonchalantly, as, still handcuffed, he was led into the room. "I didn't expect to meet you here."

"Morton," said Hope, looking the other in the eye, "Miss Burke was kidnaped this evening. I understand from the police that you could not have been concerned in it . . . but do you know who is? I won't pretend that I'm sorry for you, Morton, for I'm not, but if you can give me any information that will help me find her, I'll do what I can to help you."

"I don't know anything about it, Hope," said Morton; "not this time. I give you my word I don't. If I could help you find her, I would. Not for your sake, mind," he added bitterly, "but for hers. She's a mighty game little girl. I'm sorry I can't help you."

Hope turned away disconsolately, but the other called him back.

"Are you still looking for the secret of the submarine?" he asked, lowering his voice so that the police could not hear.

"Yes," said Hope listlessly, "I am—or rather I was until Cleo disappeared."

"Did you keep that book on metallurgy—the one that Olga and I tried to get away from Doctor Owen in the restaurant in Sandsboro?"

"Yes, it's among my things somewhere."

Morton leaned forward until his lips were close to Hope's ear.

"Turn to page sixty-one and read every seventh word," he whispered. "If you find Cleo," he continued in a louder tone, "tell her that I told you this so as to make up, as much as I can, for the way I treated her. The secret won't be of much use to me in the place I'm going," and he laughed hoarsely as he joined the waiting officer and was led back to his cell. That was the last Hope saw of Gerald Morton. Three months later he paid for his crime on the gallows at San Quentin.

* * * * * * * *

It was long after midnight when Hope returned to his hotel, but, notwithstanding the lateness of the hour and his utter weariness, he ransacked his trunks until he unearthed the work on metallurgy.

The seventh word on the page was, Hope found, "examine," which seemed promising. Again he counted seven and was rewarded with the word "cover," which apparently failed to make sense, but the next word in order was "of," which again raised his hopes, and in wild excitement he completed the hidden sentence, which read: "Examine cover of this book."

Inserting the blade of his pocket knife into the edge of the lining, he carefully worked it back and forth until it curled back. At is did so Hope gave a little exclamation of satisfaction, for, sandwiched between the lining and the cover itself, was a small square of tissue paper. Drawing it out, he read in Doctor Burke's handwriting: "The formula of my submarine invention will be found in a secret drawer under the glass tank of my working model. —R. B."

Hope felt that the mystery now was as good as solved. The key was in his hands. Mentally and physically exhausted, he threw himself upon the bed, and despite the fears and anxieties that assailed him, was almost instantly asleep. So soundly did he sleep, indeed, that it was nearly noon when he was awakened by someone pounding at his door. It proved to be a bellboy with a special delivery letter.

"If you wish to see Miss Burke alive," it ran, "come to 1121 Panuco street at nine o'clock this evening, bringing with you the work on metallurgy which formerly belonged to Doctor Burke. The door will be unlocked. Enter without ringing, ascend three flights of stairs and give four short raps on the door at the left. If you communicate with the police or bring anyone with you, it will result in Miss Burke's death. The only way you can save her is to follow these directions to the letter."

* * * * * * * *

For an hour Hope sat lost in thought. He made up his mind that, in order to ensure Cleo's safety, he must see the adventure through alone. But he had formulated a plan which, he hoped, would secure Cleo's release without the necessity of divulging the secret.

No neighborhood in San Francisco has a more evil reputation than Panuco street. No. 1121 Hope found was a narrow, four-story building which, in days long passed, had evidently been a residence of considerable pretension, but which had now fallen into a sad state of neglect and disrepair. As Hope ascended the steps, there came, from an areaway across the street, a shrill whistle, twice repeated. The kidnapers were on the watch and the two whistles were a signal to those within the house that he was unaccompanied. Swinging open the door, Hope found himself in such inky blackness that he had to strike a match in order to find the stairway. Lighting his way with matches, Hope cautiously ascended three flights of stairs. The room he was seeking was evidently on the top floor of the house. Drawing out his pistol, he cocked it, replaced it in his right-hand pocket, and then, as bidden in the letter, gave four brisk raps on the door on the left, which instantly swung open. In the doorway, his face lighted by the lamp that he held above his head, was Mahlin.

"Ha," said Hope, recognizing his former antagonist, "I rather suspected it was you I had to deal with. Where's your Jap side-partner?"

"Just behind you," replied Mahlin, and Hope, listening, heard on the stairs the footfalls of a person stealthily ascending. A moment later Satsuma joined them.

"Come in," said Mahlin briefly.

"Now," said Mahlin brusquely, when Satsuma had closed the door, "we've no time to waste, so let's get down to business. Did you bring the book?"

"Yes," replied Hope.

"Good—let's see it."

"Not quite so fast, my friend," replied the officer. "You don't get the book until Miss Burke has been released."

"Miss Burke will be released as soon as you hand over the book," declared Mahlin. "On my honor."

"You haven't any," sneered Hope. "I intend to keep the book until you release Miss Burke. I don't have to trust you and I'm not going to."

1—Plunged Outward.
2—Cleo Made Prisoner in the Storehouse.
3—In Wild Excitement He Completed the Hidden Sentence.
4—It Did Everything He Claimed for It.

"If you don't hand over the book I'll take it," snarled Mahlin, and raised his hand as though giving a signal. Hope, who had come prepared for treachery, whirled about with the quickness of thought. Nor was he an instant too soon, for, not a pace away, was Satsuma, in his upraised hand a knife. Hope, acting with the lightninglike decision of a trained boxer, launched an uppercut which caught the Japanese squarely on the point of the jaw. Under the terrific impact of the blow Satsuma's head snapped back as though his neck was broken, reeling backward, his legs struck the low windowsill, and, too dazed to save himself from Hope's impact, he plunged outward and downward to the stone-paved court, four stories below. So quickly did it occur that before Mahlin fully realized what had happened, Hope was again facing him and he was looking into the muzzle of the officer's weapon.

"Hands up," ordered Hope curtly, and Mahlin, recognizing the futility of resistance, sullenly obeyed.

"I am pressed for time," said Hope, taking out his watch, "so I can only give you three minutes in which to decide whether you are going to tell me where Miss Burke is."

"Will you let me go if I tell you where the girl is?" asked Mahlin, visibly weakening. "Will you give me your word not to turn me over to the police?"

"If Miss Burke is unharmed I shall not mention your name to the police . . . but if you've injured a hair of her head I'll send you to San Quentin for life."

"You hold the winning hand," growled Mahlin, capitulating. "Do you know where Suisun bay is?"

"Yes."

"On the south shore, about half way between Martinez and Cornwall, there's an abandoned pier. At the end of it there's an old storehouse. She's in there."

Picking his way down the stairs in the darkness, Hope gave a sigh of relief as the door of the empty house closed behind him and he found himself in the open air again. Hastening to the nearest drug store he telephoned for a touring car, stipulating that the driver must be familiar with the roads leading to Suisun bay. He stopped at the hotel to pick up the anxious Hook.

To reach the bay by motor is no easy matter, for the roads leading to it are but little used, so it lacked only a few minutes to midnight when the driver brought his car to a stop at the shore-end of the ramshackle pier, which Mahlin had described.

Inserting in the padlock the key he had obtained from Mahlin, Hope pushed open the door.

"Cleo," he called anxiously. "Cleo. Are you there? It's Hope."

But to his summons there was no answer. Cleo was gone. Suddenly Hook, who was advancing slowly with the match sheltered in his cupped palm, gave an exclamation and stopped dead. Had he taken another step he would have plunged through an open trap door in the floor of the storehouse into the waters of the bay, which gurgled and lapped the timbers of the pier only a few feet below. That someone had recently gone through that trapdoor was all too evident, for on the floor beside it, as though tossed there hastily, lay a woman's hat, a pair of high-heeled satin slippers, and an evening coat.

"Come," he said at last, pulling himself together. "We've no time to lose. He may have escaped already."

"Where we goin' now, lootenant?" asked Hook.

"Back to town," was the curt response, "to get that hell-hound Mahlin. He'll tell me what he's done with her or I'll kill him by inches."

"But hadn't we better take a look along the shore first?" urged the seaman. "She may've escaped."

"Not a chance," asserted Hope. "Besides there's no boat here, and there's no one to inquire of. There isn't a house within miles. Mahlin's either made away with her, or, what's more likely, he has her hidden somewhere else and left the clothes here as a blind. This time I'll get the truth out of him or he'll wish he'd never been born."

"A piece o' cord twisted around the thumb," observed Hook, "will make most anyone talk."

Dawn was breaking when the car again swung into Panuco street. Hope saw, with a shock, that an ambulance was backed up to the curb in front of No. 1121 and that around it stood several policemen and a small group of curious spectators.

"What's the matter, officer?" he asked, leaping from the car and accosting one of the policemen.

"Murder, sir," he answered civilly. "I was passing the end of this street a few minutes ago when I heard a shot. A moment later a man came out of this house and ran down the street. I took after him, but he got away from me. Then I hurried back here. It was dark downstairs, but there was a light on the top floor. The door of the room at the head of the stairs was open and a man was lying on the floor. He'd been shot through the heart."

"What did he look like?" asked Hope, though he knew what the answer would be.

"A tall, thin fellow," replied the policeman. "He looked like a foreigner. But they're bringing him out now—you can see him for yourself."

The dead man was Mahlin—murdered, no doubt, in a quarrel with one of his associates in crime.

"This is a queer case," said another man, evidently a detective, who had just come out of the house, addressing the policeman with whom Hope had been talking. "I just found another dead man lying in the court, a Jap, I fancy. He must have fallen from the window of the room where you found the other fellow, for every bone in his body is broken. He's still holding a knife in his hand."

* * * * * * *

A month passed. To find Cleo—if, indeed, she were still alive—Hope had left no stone unturned. Aged and suddened by grief, he at last reluctantly abandoned the search as hopeless, and turned his attention once more to the submarine invention. Following the directions given on the paper in the cover of the book, he had no difficulty in locating the secret drawer which the old inventor had so ingeniously constructed beneath the glass tank of his working model. And in the drawer, in an oilskin envelope, was the formula. Acting under instructions from Washington, Hope had a new model constructed and installed in a modern, seagoing submarine which the government placed at his disposal for the purpose, and, a month after Cleo's disappearance, the submersible, having on board a commission of naval officers, left its moorings at the Mare island yard to submit Doctor Burke's invention to a final test. It was understood that if this test proved satisfactory the government would immediately take steps to acquire the rights to the invention.

On the same morning that the submersible was starting on its trial trip, Hook was strolling aimlessly along the water front of San Francisco. As he paused irresolutely at the entrance to his favorite saloon, an acquaintance, a former shipmate, who, upon leaving the navy had turned boatman, hailed him.

"You're just the man I wanted to see," he called, "I've got some news that may interest you."

"What kind o' news?" inquired Hook.

"'Bout that girl—Montgomery, her name wuz, wuzn't it? —that disappeared a while back. But it's only a rumor, mind you, and like as not there's nothin' in it."

"Yes, yes," exclaimed Hook anxiously; "go on."

"Yestidday," said the boatman, "I wuz over to Ignacio, on the north shore of San Pablo bay. While I was hangin' round the wharf, waitin' for my party, I heerd one o' the fishermen yarnin' 'bout a girl that's stayin' with a Greek fisherman and his wife down the shore a piece. This feller that was tellin' the story says he stopped at the Greek's place to buy some bait or something and he seed this girl. He said he reckoned she'd been mighty sick, she was so white and peaked lookin', but that she must've been a hum-dinger for looks when she was well. He tried to ask the Greek—Vlasto his name is—'bout her, but he don't understand much English. When he said she was a good-looker and had awful light-colored hair, it kind o' reminded me o' the description o' the Montgomery girl."

"'Tain't likely," said Hook pessimistically. "Ignacio must be all o' thirty miles from the place where Miss Cleo disappeared."

"Still," persisted the other, "she might of been picked up by a fisherman. Now and then the San Pablo boats works up Carquinez straits into Suisun bay. Besides, these Greeks is mostly an ignorant lot, and don't read the papers nor have much to do with the Americans."

"Waal," assented Hook, "it won't do no harm to run over to Ignacio and see this fellow Vlasto. We could get there in your boat in a couple of hours, couldn't we?"

"Sure," said the other, "and remember, Hook, that if it turns out to be the girl, I come in on the reward."

Upon reaching Ignacio, Hook ascertained, after considerable questioning, that there was indeed a Greek fisherman named Vlasto who lived with his wife in a small shack on the beach, several miles from the town. Landing at the rickety little wharf and crossing the strip of sandy beach on which nets were drying, he approached the miserable dwelling. The tiny doorstep was shaded by vines, and seated under them was a girl. A pale and pitifully wasted girl, but at sight of her Hook gave a shout of joy. It was Cleo. For a moment she stared at him as though he had been a stranger; then the light of recognition showed in her great, tired eyes, and, with a sob of relief and happiness she threw both arms around his neck, like a child who has been lost and found.

By dint of careful questioning he was able to gradually piece together the strange story of her disappearance. For twenty-four hours after Mahlin's departure she had waited, without food or water, for his return. At last the darkness, thirst and hunger had their effect on nerves already overstrained; her habitual coolness deserted her and she gave way to the hysteria of blind, unreasoning fear. During the long hours of her imprisonment she had discovered in the floor of the storehouse a trap-door, which had evidently been overlooked by Mahlin, and this she raised, intending to use it as a last resort. At last, when her highly strung nerves were at the breaking point, she heard a motor car stop at the end of the wharf and the sound of men rapidly approaching. Never pausing to think that they might be friends instead of enemies, and terrified at the thought that Mahlin was returning to carry out his unspoken threat, she hurriedly threw off her coat and hat, kicked off her slippers, and, lowering herself silently through the trap-door into the water, struck off in the darkness in what she supposed to be the direction of the shore. But she lost her bearings, her strength failed her, and, with a cry for help, she lost consciousness. When, after many days, she returned to a realization of things, she was in bed, evidently in a fisherman's hut, tended by an old Greek fisherman and his wife. The shock of her abduction, her fear of Mahlin and Satsuma, and her narrow escape from death by drowning, had resulted in a long and alarming nervous break-down, from which she was gradually recovering.

"I've got a boat out here, Miss Cleo," said Hook, when he had heard her story, "and I'm going to take you back to town."

And to this plan she had made no objection. Only once, indeed, did she ask a question.

"Jarvis?" she asked. "Is he well . . . has he missed me?"

"The lootenant's been almost crazy with grief, Miss Cleo," the old sailor answered simply. And with that she seemed content.

* * * * * * * *

The official trial of Doctor Burke's invention had surpassed Hope's greatest expectations. It had done everything that he had claimed for it.

"We are entirely satisfied, Mr. Hope," the chairman of the commission had told him. "I shall wire the secretary of the navy tonight urging that steps be taken immediately to acquire the rights for the government. Once our submarines are fitted with this apparatus, our coasts and harbors will be virtually immune from attack."

And now, with the submarine running awash as it sped back to Mare island, Hope stood on the deck beside the conning tower, staring out across the water of the bay turned momentarily crimson by the setting sun. The secret of the submarine had been found at last. It had proved an unqualified success. The acceptance by the government was virtually assured. He had accomplished his mission and would doubtless receive commendation and promotion. But of what avail was it all now? With Cleo gone his success was not worth having. Tears blinded him at the thought of how, had she been alive, they would have rejoiced together.

So engrossed was he in his melancholy thoughts that he failed to observe the dingy power boat which ran alongside as the submarine slowed down to approach its moorings. Standing in the stern was Hook, waving his hat delightedly. He had evidently come out to offer congratulations. But, as the fishing boat came closer, he stepped aside and the young officer, looking down with staring, incredulous eyes, saw, seated in the stern amid a pile of pillows, a girl, white and fragile as a flower, who smiled up at him happily. For a moment he continued to stare as though his eyes deceived him. Then, with a great cry of love and happiness, he sprang to the deck of the fishing boat and gathered her into his arms.

THE END.

POLTIKAL EDDYTORIUL

The time has came when we persoom the Administrashion at Washington is purty anxshious to know whether the Bingville Boogle intends to support it for another term. In other words it is only fair to spose that President Wilson would feel a good eal more comfortabler if he only could feel shure that as Edditor & Prop. of the Bugle we was a going to fite tooth & nail for his re-eleckshion.

Then on tother hand theres Candydate Hughes. The chances is it would give him a good eal of satisfackshion if he only knowd whitch side of the fence we was on so he could make his campaign plans according in order to git hisself eleckted if possibil to the highest offis within the gift of the peepul.

Several of our most respeckted cittizens has asked us recent who the Bugle was a going to support for President and we repeet that the time has came when the inhabitants of Bingville in partickler and the populashion of the country in general is waiting with baited breth, as we might say, to lern where the Bugle stands polotikal.

If you have follerd the eddytoriul polisy of the Bugle as close as you ort to of follerd it, you have probly notised that we have sort of layed back on our oars during President Wilson's administrashion. You have probly notised that we aint dicktated enny policies to President Wilson or offerd enny sujjestshions as to how the guvverment ort to be run. On the corntrary we have left all sitch crittycizms & sujjestshions to several of our most respeckted cittizens who colleckts every evg in Hen Weathersbys store and tells what they would do if they was president of the U. S. A. Some of em calkilates if they was president they would run things in this country a leetle mite different, but it is our unbiased opinyun that they would moren likely run it into the ground and up the spout.

As to who the Bugle will support at the approaching eleckshion will depend a good eal on circumstances. As we go to press our inflooence aint been solisited by either side and we desire to state in this conneckshion that we stand ready to be solisited and to talk bizness with either party. In other words we are open to enny propoisishion whitch they see fit to put up to us and our eddytoriul inflooence & polisy will be largely determined by whitchever side considers it worth the most to em.

In short as editor of the Bugle we aint made up our mind as yet on this vital questshion. We are open to convickshion, but we cant deside sitch a turrible important step according to the dicktates of our own conshients until after we have conferd by mail or otherwise with the county organisashions and ascertain to whitch party the inflooence of the Bugle would be the biggest as repersented in dollars and cents.

Eph Higgins our accommodating P. M. of the Bingville P. O. is a good eal put out at the present writing owing to a misforchune whitch has happend to him.

Tother day there come in the mail from the co. seat a postal card for Mrs. Levina Wilkins. According to his reglar custom Eph laid it aside instid of putting it into Levinas box until sitch a time as he wouldnt be so bizzy but what he would have time to read what was on it.

Jest after the mail was changed who should come flouncing into the P. O. and ask for her mail but Levina herself. Eph told Levina there wassent nothink in her box whitch was the truth, but he diddent say nothink about the postal card for her whitch he had laid aside.

After a spell Eph tuk up the card with a burning curiossitty, to find out who was a writing to Levina and what about, but he couldnt seem to read the writing with his far sighted specks, so he walked all the way home for his near sighted ones but they wassent no better. The writing on the card was sitch a awful scrawl that Eph couldnt make out neither head nor tail of it nor even the name signed to it. Eph showed it to several of his P. O. patrons but nobuddy could read it. Finally word got around to Levina that Eph was holding back a postal card for her so she went to the offis maddern a wet hen and demanded it.

Eph give it to her and told Levina he was glad to git rid of it being as he had nearly sprained his eyesight tryin to read it but couldnt nor nobuddy else. Levina told Eph for two cents shed report him to the guvvernment for doing that. Eph told her to go ahead and report becuz if he lost the Bingville P. Mship he would consider it a blessing ruthern a calamitty.

Heck Palmer Spilt

Heck Palmer who lives 2 miles west of Bingville while driving into town last Friday with butter & eggs to exchange at Hen Weathersbys store for groceries & merchandise in his spring wagon met a old big he-ottymobeel on the road comin right for him at the rate of 60 miles a hour more or less.

Heck diddent haft to turn out being as his old mare Nelly done that for him. The road was narrer at this pint with a high bank on both sides and afore Heck knowd what had happend Nelly clim right up the bank whitch is steepern a roof spillin Heck, butter & eggs outen the back end of the waggin. Heck landed in the ditch beside the road on his head and shoulders whitch stund him some.

When he got on his feet Heck was mad as a hornet and grabd up a stone to throw at the felers in the ottymobeel who by that time was several miles farther on. Then Heck looked up and there was his waggin hangin on the fence and Nelly nowhere in sight. She had jumpd clean outen the harness over the fence and struck acrost the field into the woods. It tuk Heck two hours to ketch her and when he got back to the road he found the waggin badly damaged, the butter melted and evry egg broke.

Heck says if he knowd who them fellers was in that ottoymobeel he wouldnt sue em for damages. He says that ruthern sue em for damages it would give him a good eal more satisfackshion to hunt em up and knock the stuffin outen both of em until they would haft to go on crutches for several wks to come. Knowing Heck as well as we do we persoom he means evry word he says and our advice to them fellers who scairt his horse is to keep outen his way becuz Heck aint to be trifeld with when he gits riled up. When hes that way hed ruther fite than ete even when hes hungry.

NEWS AND VIEWS OF THE FARMER

DAMAGE FROM THE CLOVER LEAFHOPPER

The Injuries Caused By This Insect, Are Often Overlooked Because of the Minute Size of the Pest—Simple Measures Recommended For Controlling It.

The clover leafhopper does far more damage than is usually realized. In a new publication of the United States Department of Agriculture (Farmers' Bulletin 737) by Edmund H. Gibson, it is stated that the loss from this cause to the clover and alfalfa hay crops of the country is frequently attributed to poor soil and climatic conditions. For this the minute size of the pest, which frequently enables it to escape observation, is largely responsible. As a matter of fact, continued attacks by the leafhopper, especially in some of the Central States, often result in the loss of a considerable percentage of a single cutting.

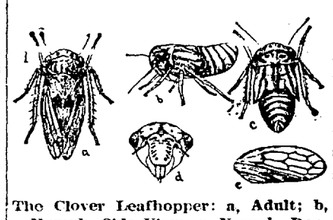
It is characteristic of leafhoppers to crowd together in great numbers, as many as 600 having been counted upon one plant. In feeding upon the plant the insects make tiny punctures. Around these the tissue gradually becomes yellow, the spots enlarging and becoming more pronounced until the leaflets ultimately curl up and the foliage wilts. The female also forces her eggs into the stem and leaf tissue, frequently causing a gall-like formation. Alfalfa, clover, cowpeas and vetch are among the principal plants attacked, but the pest is common in meadow and pasture lands and feeds on a number of cultivated as well as native grasses throughout practically the entire country.

The clover leafhopper is about 1-8 of an inch in length and half as wide, and is marked in a manner to distinguish it from many other kinds of leafhoppers that occur in fields of clover and alfalfa. The farmer will distinguish leafhoppers from other insects by their habit of jumping, their quick movements, and their minute size. In certain respects they resemble diminutive grasshoppers.

As the clover leafhopper spends the winter under clumps of grass, weeds and trash, the burning of rubbish and vegetation during winter months in waste places and along fence rows and roadsides will do much to prevent the pest attaining destructive numbers the following year. This precaution will destroy great numbers of other hibernating insects as well as the leafhoppers.

During the growing season close cutting or pasturing of grass lands is recommended. Cutting alfalfa crops from a week to ten days earlier than usual will often check the ravages of the insects and may be advisable when there is evidence that the leafhoppers are causing sufficient injury to justify the risk of loss through premature cutting.

Each year this leafhopper, by lessening the vitality of its food plants, occasions more or less damage over its entire range of distribution, causing a positive, although not easily estimated, decrease in the clover and alfalfa hay crops of the country. Continued attacks often result in the loss of a considerable percentage of a single cutting; especially is this true in some of the Central States. The leafhopper causes the greatest damage during the spring and early summer months, as the foliage is then most succulent and the tissues very tender, enabling even the immature leafhoppers readily to pierce the skin of leaf and stem and suck the juices. The incessant drain from concentrated attacks causes the clover plants to wither, and although they may not die, the new growth which is put forth is very apt to be thin and spindling. With alfalfa it is the first two crops which appear to suffer most. The drain upon alfalfa plants does not show as markedly as with clover, especially during a drought, since the alfalfa roots go deeper into the ground and the plant is better able to withstand adverse conditions.



The Clover Leafhopper: a, Adult; b, Nymph, Side View; c, Nymph, Dorsal View; d, Face; e, Elytron.

In many localities these leafhoppers are commonly known as "flies," but in reality they resemble flies only in having wings, and because they are about the size of many small flies seen in the fields. The adult or parent insects are light gray in color, but have numerous dark markings which give them a mottled appearance. They are about one-eighth of an inch in length and half as wide.

The manner in which they jump from plant to plant is much like that of grasshoppers.

The primary injury is produced by the direct feeding of the leafhoppers. The single tiny feeding puncture is itself inconsequential, and injury results only when a great number of leafhoppers attack the same plant.

The clover leafhopper is distributed generally throughout the United States, records showing its occurrence in every section of the country. Its range also includes southern Canada and Mexico.

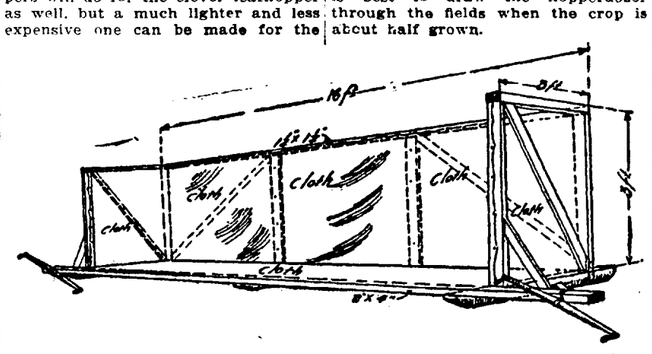
The number of generations of the leafhopper produced annually in a given locality varies from year to year, depending on weather conditions, and it also varies in different latitudes and climates. For southern Missouri and northern Arkansas there are usually three distinct broods, covering approximately (1) April and May, (2) June and July, and (3) August and September. Farther south or under subtropical conditions it is probable that there are four or more.

In the Northern States the clover leafhopper hibernates in the adult stage, at the base of clumps of grass and weeds and under dried leaves and trash. Throughout the Central and Southern States it could hardly be said to hibernate; instead, the adults merely keep in hiding and under cover during cold weather, coming out on warm days to bask in the sun and feed upon such green foliage as can be found. In Missouri, for example, the adult insects have been observed feeding upon wheat during January and February, but not in any abundance. Nymphs cannot long survive cold weather, and it is not probable that eggs survive over winter. In the extreme Southwest, where conditions are radically different, the leafhopper is active throughout the entire year.

The adults are quick of movement and jump from plant to plant when disturbed. When strong winds prevail they remain in hiding, as they seem to dislike windy weather. Their most characteristic habit is that of congregating in great numbers on one plant, frequently to such an extent that they crowd one another. This is what causes the concentrated attacks in "spots" throughout a field. The clover leafhopper does not seem to seek shady or damp places, rather preferring the heat of the midday sun.

The nymphs are much less active than the adults and are not easily disturbed. When one brushes against the plants they cling fast to the stems and leaves instead of jumping to another plant. Like the adults, they have the habit of crowding together along a stem or upon a leaf.

For direct control the hopperdozer is recommended. Any form of this device that is suitable for grasshoppers will do for the clover leafhopper as well, but a much lighter and less expensive one can be made for the smaller insects by stretching canvas over a wooden frame. This can be made of such light weight that it will not injure the alfalfa and clover plants when it is pulled over a field. Two horses, one hitched at either end, are used for drawing it. On the inside of the canvas a thin coat of a sticky substance made of tree tanglefoot which has been thinned with cheap castor oil is spread with a paddle or shingle. As the leafhoppers and other insects alight on the surface of this substance they are held fast. Such substances as cheap sorghum have been tried in place of tree tanglefoot. The sorghum, however, dries out too quickly and frequent applications of it have to be made. It is best to draw the hopperdozer through the fields when the crop is about half grown.



Construction of Frame for Hopperdozer for Destruction of Leafhoppers, Over Which Canvas Is Stretched.

It may be said that there are two main ways in which flytraps are valuable: (1) Catching flies which come to clean premises from other places which are insanitary and (2) capturing those flies which invariably escape in greater or less numbers the other means of destruction which may be practiced. Furthermore, the number of flies caught in traps serves as an index of the effectiveness of campaigns against breeding places.

The various species of flies which are commonly annoying about habitations or where foodstuffs are being prepared may be divided roughly into two classes: (1) Those which breed in animal matter, consisting mainly of the so-called "blowflies"; and (2) those which breed in vegetable as well as in animal matter. In the latter group the house fly is by far the most important. The stable fly is strictly a vegetable breeder, as are also certain other species which occasionally come into houses and may in rare cases contaminate foodstuffs. The stable fly, which breeds in manure or decaying vegetable matter, and the horn fly, which breeds in cow manure, are blood-sucking species and can be caught in ordinary flytraps in comparatively small numbers only. The kind of flies caught depends to a considerable extent on the material used for bait. In general the housefly and other species which breed in vegetable matter are attracted to vegetable substances while the blowflies will come most readily to animal matter.

This rule, of course, is not absolute, as flies are less restricted in feeding than in breeding habits, and, as is well known, the house fly is attracted to a greater or less extent to any moist material, especially if it has an odor.

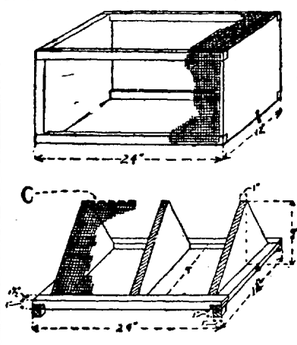
The same general principle is involved in nearly all flytraps in use, though superficially they may appear quite different. The flies are attracted into a cage, as it were, by going through a passage the entrance of which is large and the exit small, so there is little chance of the flies, once in, finding their way out again. This principle is modified to fit different conditions.

The attractant used to induce flies to enter traps may consist of (1) food, as in baited traps; (2) odors, as in window traps placed in windows from which odors are emitted; and (3) light, as in traps on manure boxes. Of course light is an important factor in the success of all traps, for, as is well known, flies have a marked tendency to go toward the light, and they usually enter the trap by flying toward the light after having been attracted beneath it by bait or after entering a room in search of food.

A number of traps of this general type are on the market, but most of these are of small size. Nearly all are constructed with a dome instead of a cone, and on this account the catching power is reduced about one-third. Moreover, the farmer, dairyman, or anyone with a few tools can construct traps at a small fraction of the sale price of ready-made ones.

Prof. C. F. Hodge has adapted the cone trap to use on the lids of garbage cans. A hole is cut in the lid of the can and a small balloon trap attached over the hole. Practically speaking the garbage forms a bait for this trap, and when inside the can the flies are attracted to the light admitted through the trap. It is really advisable to have the garbage cans fly proof, so as to prevent danger of fly breeding within them, rather than to depend on traps on the lids, which necessarily allow odors to escape.

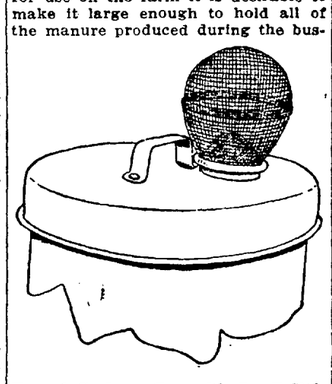
Manure pits or boxes are desirable for the temporary storage of manure, especially in towns and cities. These have been widely advocated, but the difficulty has been that manure often becomes infested before it is put into them, and flies frequently breed out before the boxes are emptied and often escape through the cracks. To obviate these difficulties a manure box or pit, with a modified tent trap or cone trap attached, is desirable. Mr. Arthur Swaim, of Florida, has devised a form of manure trap consisting of a series of screen tents with exit holes along the ridges of these, over which is a screen box. The latter retains the flies as they pass through the holes in the tents. The entire trap is removable.



Tent Flytrap. When the Trap Is Set Up the Screen Box, A, Fits on the Base, B, and Two Pans of Bait Are Placed Beneath the Tent. C, Hole in Screen at Apex of Tent.

In order to retain the fertilizing value of manure to the greatest extent it is advisable to exclude the air from it as much as possible and to protect it from the leaching action of rains. This being the case, there is really no necessity for covering a large portion of the top of the box with a trap, but merely to have holes large enough to attract flies to the light, and cover these holes with ordinary conical traps, with the legs cut off, so the bottom of the trap will fit closely to the box. The same arrangement can be made where manure is kept in a pit. In large bins two or more holes covered with traps should be provided for the escape of the flies.

Manure boxes should be used by all stock owners in towns and cities, and they are also adaptable to farms. The size of the manure bin should be governed by the individual needs, but for use on the farm it is desirable to make it large enough to hold all of the manure produced during the busiest season of the year. A box 14 feet long, 10 feet wide, and 4 feet deep will hold the manure produced by two horses during about five months. About 2 cubic feet of box space should be allowed for each horse per day. The bin should be made of concrete or heavy plank. When the latter is used the cracks should be battened to prevent the escape of flies. The bin may have a floor or it may be set in the ground several inches and the dirt closely banked around the outside. For the admission of the manure a good-sized door should be provided in either end of a large bin. A portion of the top should be made easily removable for convenience in emptying the box, or one entire end of the box may be hinged. On account of the danger of the door being left open through carelessness, it is advisable to arrange a lift door which can be opened by placing the foot on a treadle as the manure is shoveled in. The door should be heavy enough to close automatically when the treadle is released.



Top of Garbage Can with Small Balloon Flytrap Attached.

In many cases fly trapping has been rendered ineffectual by the fact that the traps were not properly cared for. In setting traps a location should be chosen where flies naturally congregate. This is usually on the sunny side of a building out of the wind. It is exceedingly important that the bait containers be kept well filled. This usually requires attention every other day. The bait pans should be washed out at rather frequent intervals. This gives a large catch and avoids the danger of flies breeding in the material used for bait. Further, it should be borne in mind that traps cannot be operated successfully throughout the season without emptying them. Where flies are abundant and the bait pans are properly attended to the traps should be emptied at weekly intervals. Where flies become piled high against the side of the cone the catching power of the trap is considerably reduced. The destruction of the flies is best accomplished by immersing the trap in hot water, or still better, where a tight barrel is at hand place a few live coals in a pan on the ground, scatter two tablespoonfuls of sulphur over them, place the trap over the coals, and turn the barrel over the trap. All of the flies will be rendered motionless in about five minutes. They may then be killed by using hot water, throwing them into a fire, or burying them.

Sticky fly papers are of some value in destroying flies which have gained access to houses, but they have marked limitations and numerous objectionable features. For use out of doors, traps are much more effective and economical.

Dr. Crumbine, of the Kansas State Board of Health, gives the following method of preparing fly paper:

"Take 2 pounds of rosin and 1 pint of castor oil, heat together until it looks like molasses. Take an ordinary paint brush and smear while hot on any kind of paper—an old newspaper is good—and place several about the room. A dozen of these may be made at a cost of 1 cent."

The charms of the pergola are manifold when adorned with vines and properly placed. All vines can be used for covering pergolas, but the wistaria is ideal for this purpose. The Virginia creeper and the trumpet vine are frequently used and, in fact, all strong growing vines.

Extent of Forest Fires in 1915

Forest fires burned over not quite 300,000 acres of national forest land in 1915, according to official reports just compiled, or less than 2 acres per thousand. Out of a total of 6,324 fires, 346, or 5½ per cent, did damage to the amount of $100 or more.

The timber loss was 156,000,000 board feet, valued at $190,000. Although the season was regarded as one of unusual exposure, owing to delayed fall rains, the loss was materially below the average of the last five years. Over 87 per cent of this loss occurred in the States of Oregon, Washington and Idaho, while more than 72 per cent was in Oregon alone. Besides the timber loss, fires destroyed reproduction, or young tree growth, of an estimated value of $160,000, and $3,407 worth of forage. The loss per fire in 1915 was $60.41, which is $14.03 less than the five-year average, while the cost of fighting each fire was $20.83 less.

Lightning figures as the chief cause of forest fires in 1915, as it does in the average year. Twenty-eight and a half per cent of the fires were due to this cause. Campers caused 18 per cent, which is 2½ per cent higher than the average. Eleven per cent were caused by brush burning. Nearly 11 per cent were of incendiary origin. Railroads were responsible for nearly 9 per cent of the fires in 1915, as against 14½ per cent due to this cause in the average year. The causes of over 15 per cent were unknown. Lumbering operations caused less than 3 per cent.

SMALL TRACTOR IS GROWING IN FAVOR.

The farm tractor is generally a profitable implement if enough land is cultivated to use it economically. This is the opinion expressed by three-fourths of the two hundred tractor users in Illinois to investigators for the United States Department of Agriculture. About one-third of the men in this list increased the acreage, on an average 120 acres to the farm, after buying the tractors and finding that they did not have room to use them to the best advantage.

TEACHING THE COLT TO EAT.

Encourage the colt to eat early, preferably feeding crushed oats and bran in equal parts. Let him have alfalfa and clover hay as soon as he will eat it. Experience shows that a ration of corn and alfalfa gives better results than a ration of corn and timothy or prairie hay.

A Saving of Cow Feed

In feeding a cow from a pail more or less is lost. By fastening the pail to the cow, on the order that a nose-bag is put onto horses, she cannot get her head from the pail—it cannot be upset, nor can the feed be scattered or slobbered. Bore a hole in each side of the pail and fasten the halter in such a way as to prevent accident.

FRESH VEGETABLES THE YEAR AROUND.

Greens, roasting ears, beans, peas and all the other farm grown vegetables can be canned as successfully as gooseberries if the directions given for canning by Miss Bab Bell and Miss Addie D. Root of the Agricultural Extension Service of the University of Missouri are followed. Extension Circular 9, describing the "cold pack" method of canning, has just been issued. This will be distributed free to Missouri housewives, the members of the Girls' Canning Clubs organized by the Agricultural Extension Service, and any others interested.

The "cold pack" method described in this circular is easy but sure. No failures will result if attempts are made to can the ordinary farm vegetables according to directions given in this circular.

GOOD STOCK ON THE INCREASE.

That the farmers are realizing the value of the purebred stallion is shown by the fact that the number of such horses registered has increased more than 50 per cent since 1910 and that the number of grade stallions registered has decreased more than 14 per cent in the same time.

"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches" was spoken more than a thousand years ago, but it is just as true today as it was then.

Homemade Shower Bath

A very simple, convenient and cheap arrangement for a homemade shower bath has been built by the members of a woman's home demonstration club in Covington, Va., and it is considered especially useful in homes where there are many children. This device was made by using a 2 or 4 gallon tin bucket. A hole was punched in the bottom and a piece of pipe about 1½ to 2 inches long soldered in the opening. A piece of rubber hose 4 to 6 feet long was attached to this and a sprayer from the watering can or a nozzle placed on the end. A rope was tied to the handle of the bucket and run through a staple which was driven in the joist beside the window sash, making a pulley by which the bucket could be raised or lowered to suit the convenience of the person taking the shower. A hook was placed below this staple so that the rope could be fastened to hold the bucket in place, and a clothespin used over the rubber tube to cut off the water. A large tin tub was placed underneath to stand in. Estimated cost of this convenience was as follows:

A 2-gallon tin bucket	$0.15
Medium-sized zinc bucket	.75
12 feet of rope	.07
Nozzle and rubber tubing	.65
Pulley	.10
Piece of piping	.10
Clothespin	.01
White paint	.15

VALUE OF HAIRY VETCH.

About ten years ago, on a piece of poor clay-loam soil at the North Carolina station, vetch was used in rotation with corn and cotton to build up productivity. The soil was in a run-down, humus-deficient condition and would produce only meager crops, as it tended to run together and cement after each rain.

Within five years, by the use of vetch in the rotation and the judicious application of commercial fertilizers, the productivity of the land was increased more than 200 per cent, and the soil was brought to a loose and friable condition. The vetch was sown each fall after the corn or cotton and plowed into the soil during the following spring after it had about completed its growth.

One acre of corn harvested by hogs will return a greater profit than an equal area harvested in the usual way.

See any sawdust on the peach-trees near the ground? Borers! Get after them with a sharp wire, or they will destroy the tree in a year or two.

Wheat For Hogs

By L. A. WEAVER.

Information of value to pork-producers, especially in seasons when the corn crop is short, has been obtained by carrying on experimental work with other crops grown on the farm by the Missouri Agricultural Experiment Station. By conducting feeding trials with wheat it has been shown that under some conditions wheat may well be used for hog feeding instead of corn. Results obtained show that when corn is worth 70 cents or more a bushel, wheat may be profitably substituted for corn if the wheat is worth 90 cents or less. Likewise if corn is worth 80 cents per bushel, wheat is worth $1.03 a bushel as hog feed.

It has been further shown that pork may be produced more cheaply by adding a small amount of tankage to a mixture of corn and wheat than by feeding these feeds without such a supplement.

For example, the cost of producing 100 pounds of pork with corn and tankage was 60 cents less than when corn alone was used. This would mean an additional profit to the producer of $100 or more on each carload of hogs fed.

Extensive tests have proven that tankage added to the feed increased the rate of gain and reduced the amount of grain required to produce a hundred pounds of gain. This increase in gain was much more pronounced, however, during the first 78 days of the 120-day feed than during the last 42 days. Results indicate that it would be profitable to supply tankage to fattening hogs for the entire feeding period when corn was used, but only for the first 78-day period when wheat was fed. While the addition of tankage to the wheat ration increased the rate of gain during the last 42 days of the 120-day feeding period, this increase was hardly enough to warrant the increase made in the price of the ration due to the addition of the tankage.

If there are any country women who are wasting their time envying their sisters in the city—don't do it. Such an attitude is out of date.

Keep Milk Sweet

It is no trick at all to keep milk sweet in cold weather. It may stay in the sun for half a day in December without any great damage, but in July and August it must be handled very carefully. Whether the milk or cream is intended for the table, the creamery or the milk market, it must be sweet if it is to bring the best price.

To keep milk sweet just two simple things must be very carefully looked after: (1) it must be cooled as completely and as quickly after milking as possible, and (2) absolute cleanliness of pails, cans and cows must be secured. If this is done, thunder storms will no longer sour the milk. The warm, damp weather which we have just before thunder storms really does tend to cause milk to sour if it has not been properly cared for.

This souring takes place because little invisible plants called bacteria get into it in dirt or by lurking in the corners and seams of poorly cleaned pails and cans. The remedy is plain. Keep the bacteria out by using seamless pails and cans and seeing that absolutely no dirt or dust gets into the milk in the stable or anywhere else.

Profits from milk will be greatly increased by a good supply and proper use of clean hot water and an ice-house or a good cold spring—Percy Werner, Jr.

FARM LANDS INCREASE IN VALUE.

The value of farm lands of the United States is estimated at $45.55 per acre, as compared with $40.85 a year ago, $40.31 two years ago, $38.10 three years ago, and $36.23 four years ago. The census reported the value of farm lands in 1910 as $32.40, and in 1900 as $15.57 per acre.

In recent years the value of farm lands has been increasing at the rate of about 5 per cent a year, or approximately $2 per acre per year. The exceptional increase of the past year may be explained partly by the reaction in the southern cotton States following a temporary depression last year, and partly by the stimulus given by the war to prices, particularly of grain.

MANURE FOR CLOVER.

Barnyard manure applied to clover sod to be turned under the following spring has yielded an average return of $4.69 a ton in experiments at the Iowa Experiment Station. Applications on cover-mixed meadows left for hay have produced an annual return of $3.76 a ton at the Iowa station.

No dairy was ever too clean.

Support For Hammock

It is no longer necessary to have trees or a porch in order to swing a hammock. A Tennessee man has invented a hammock support which not only has all the advantages of the natural support but shade, but includes many virtues of its own. This contrivance consists of two bars, telescoping one on the other. At one end of each bar is a pedestal on which stand uprights, shaped like the letter "A." To the top of these uprights the hammock is swung. The advantages of this support are that the two ends can be moved as far apart or as close together is the telescoping bar will permit, and the uprights may be given any slant desired by means of brace rods, which fit into holes bored at intervals along the bottom. The whole thing can be taken apart and folded into a small space when not in use or can be put up in the house as well as outdoors. A canopy can be made to shield any person, using the hammock, from the sun.

DON'T KEEP HENS OVER THREE YEARS OF AGE.

Unless you are raising a particular stock of chickens of which you have only a few hens, you cannot afford to keep the old hens as layers. A hen is not profitable after her third summer as a layer. Selling the old hens and using the incubator for hatching is the best plan for the small poultryman.

Rock and water gardens are coming into use quite generally now. Nearly all large estates and many smaller places have them.

Grafting to Insure Good Pear Trees

The first or second crop of fruit will show the quality, some which may be undesirable. Some varieties are predisposed to cracking, some to softening of the core, while others are knotty, and of poor quality—not as a general thing, but under present conditions.

From the varieties that are most desirable, those showing inferior qualities should be top-worked as follows:

Scatter the grafts through the tops—inserting so many that (each forming a small branch by itself) the whole taken together will make a full top in a few years.

Select six or eight of the main scaffolding limbs, and trim off the greater part of the side branches, but if the tree is a large one, only part of the top should be removed the first season (the remainder to be taken off the second year), and this part of the tree grafted. In these six or eight limbs there should be twenty-five or thirty grafts set.

Care should be exercised that the grafts are evenly distributed over the top, so that there will be a well balanced head of the new variety.

TO MAKE COCKROACH POWDER.

The cockroach is a hard insect to destroy and success usually results only from long, careful, persistent treatment with either one of the better powders sold on the market for that purpose or with a mixture of three parts of flour with one part of plaster of Paris. Set this dry mixture in a low, flat dish where the roaches can reach it and put a saucer of water beside it. Any roach that eats and drinks at these two dishes will cease to be troublesome. Powdered sweet chocolate mixed with equal parts of borax and scattered about cracks and crevices will also help to reduce cockroaches.—L. Haseman, Missouri College of Agriculture.

SCRUB SIRES DO NOT PAY.

Just recently two Utah ranchmen are reported to have sold their cattle on the same market on the same day. Both used the same amount of national forest range per head and paid the same grazing fee. One had used good bulls to produce his cattle, the other had not. The good cattle brought $40 per head more than the poor cattle.

Forgetting to salt the cows is a variation from the straight and narrow way that won't do if you expect to succeed with cows.

CHICAGO GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

Chicago, Aug. 26.—Yesterday's advance tempted further profit taking by wheat longs today. Opening prices were ¼c lower to ⅝c higher, but prices immediately sagged. September, which sold as high as $1.54¼ at the start, dropped to $1.52⅛. December, after opening at $1.55½ to $1.55, sold down to $1.52.

The close was weak, ⅞c to 2c under yesterday.

Light rains and the wheat weakness brought a fair volume of long corn early. December started unchanged to ¼c higher at 75⅞c to 76c, declined to 75@75¼c.

The close was easy, ¼c to ⅞c down.

Commission houses were active on both sides of the oats market.

Purchases of December and January lard by eastern shorts gave a little flare to the provisions market at the start but the bulge was lost on profit taking. September pork opened 20c lower.

Fielder Jones has signed a shortstop entitled Harold Horkheimer, who was a sensation his first year out with Bridgeport. We'll say that name alone would create a sensation in any man's league.

An old time chef once said eggs may be variously cooked but he'd hate to take the job of poaching Connie Mack's.

A. Bugg writes asking if Dan Briner ever was considered as good a pitcher as Chris Mathewson. According to the Cardinals Daniel considered himself the equal of Matty or any other pitcher.

See where Fielder Jones smokes 25 cigars a day. Allowing 20 minutes per smoke that would keep Fielder smoking about eight hours out of 24. You gotta admit that's some smoking.

For the benefit of those who haven't heard, let it be known that Ichiya Kumagae is a Jap tenniser and can't be played on a ukalale.

American league batters have taken a straw vote on Babe Ruth's status among the left-handers. They agree his name should be ruthless.

CAPTURES INTERSTATE TOURNEY.

St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 26.—Al Koyen, Fremont, Neb., won the preliminary handicap of the interstate association trap shooting tournament Friday, 97 out of 100.

The professional exhibition was won by Homer Clark, Alton, Ill., who broke 99 targets. Mrs. C. H. Topperwein gave an exhibition of fast shooting and broke 91.

Today is ladies' day. There is a special match between the women shooters of the east against the west.

The five high scores in the preliminary handicap were: Al Koyen, Fremont, Neb., 97; L. A. Rambo, Delong, Ill., 96; J. G. Gray, Bloomington, Ill., 95; O. C. Botger, Ollie, Iowa, 95; Del Miller, West Allis, Wis., 95.

GOSNELL BADLY HURT.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 26.—Curt Gosnell, the popular trainer, under whose care Single G has become one of the greatest pacers of all time, did not have the mount Friday behind Single G, when the pacer started in the free-for-all. Instead Gosnell is in a critical condition at St. Alexis' hospital and his physician refuses to state what chance Curt has of recovery, stating that it is impossible to tell how badly Gosnell is injured internally.

Gosnell, who is one of the hardest luck trainers in the country, and has been injured badly many times during his racing career, was injured yesterday while working the pacing mare, Hazel Armstrong. On the first Hazel hit herself, tangled up in her hopples and fell. When the mare went down Gosnell was thrown out, and, in addition to getting a terrible fall, was struck by the mare in her struggles to extricate herself from the mixup.

EVERS BACK AGAIN.

Boston, Mass., Aug. 26.—The suspension of Capt. John J. Evers, of the Boston Nationls, imposed by President Tener Tuesday, was lifted Friday, according to a telegram from the league executive to President Haughton, of the Braves. Evers' indefinite suspension followed words with the umpires at St. Louis last Saturday.

LETTER FROM RALSTON WINS SOLDIER CHEERS

Indiana Governor's Missive Inspiring to Troops on Mexican Border.

Llano Grande, Texas, Aug. 26.—Indiana soldiers do not doubt but what Governor Ralston's sympathetic interest has followed them to the Mexican border, and it was because they believe in his sincerity that they cheered his name to the echo Thursday night when a greeting from him was read at a meeting held in the Indiana camp Y. M. C. A. building.

General Lewis, commander of the Indiana brigade, presided and expressed his personal appreciation of the service the Y. M. C. A. is rendering to the soldiers in the camp. He read the governor's letter, which had been sent here in care of A. K. Jones of the Indianapolis Y. M. C. A. who has come here as one of the secretaries at the Indiana building.

Colonel Naftzger of the First Indiana, spoke also, making complimentary references to the governor, praising the Y. M. C. A. work for its service here and paying a tribute to the grit of the Indiana soldiers.

Letter From Governor.

The governor's letter follows:

"Mr. A. K. Jones, a representative of the Young Men's Christian association of Indianapolis, has been assigned to duty by the organization with the Indiana troops, now in the service of their country on the southern border. He is commissioned to bear to you the good wishes and greetings, not only of this organization, but of all the good people of Indiana. I have asked him to assure you of my continued interest as governor in the personal welfare of each of you. The people back home, I would have you know, are eagerly reading the accounts of your doings and of the conditions under which you are living. Judging from what one hears, by way of public expressions here at home, the people are more solicitous for your immediate welfare than they are for their own.

"You are rendering a public service for all the people of our beloved country. The honor and glory of the flag of our nation is very largely in your keeping at this critical period in our country's history, and in these bloodieste bloodiest days since civilization planted the first torch in man's halting way.

Task Is Serious One.

"Your task is a serious one, but when it shall have been discharged by you, as it will be, it will endear you to and distinguish you in the minds of all right thinking people.

"In carrying the spirit of the Young Men's Christian association to you, it is the hope and ambition of Mr. Jones to lessen the severity of your privations and to aid in pushing forward the work of this world-wide organization. The association is always alert to assist those whose lives it touches. It wants to help you through the efforts of Mr. Jones. It wants to do this without cost to you, but with your hearty co-operation. It wants to bring to your view and your consideration the things that may help to make it easier for you to hold fast to the helpful and inspiring ideals of life. He will endeavor to do this in part by moving pictures and practical talks; by supplying you with magazines and newspapers; with writing material and game tables; with phonographs and other musical instruments, and by personal counsel and religious meetings.

"I hope that you may lay hold of him as he will lay hold of you, and that together you will labor and cooperate with one another in an endeavor to make life livable—make it enjoyable and noteworthy—while you are preparing yourselves under the stress of unusual conditions to hear and obey the orders of those in authority over you."

TEXAS HOLDING PRIMARY

Democratic Senatorial Nomination at Stake in Today's Contest.

Dallas, Texas, Aug. 26.—At least sixty per cent. of the voting strength of Texas, which numbers about 500,000, was expected to be polled today in the run off primary between Senator Charles A. Culbertson and former Governor Oscar B. Colquitt for the democratic United States senatorial nomination. These candidates received pluralities in the primary of July 22, Colquitt's lead over his nearest competitor being 31,000. The question of endorsement of the national democratic Mexican policy was one of the issues in the race. Former Governor Colquitt's exceptions to President Wilson's administration of Mexican affairs have been cited as evidence of his alleged discord with the present executive.

BABY BONDS TEACH BOY THRIFTY HABITS

A local business man, the father of a husky sixteen-year-old, whom he requires to spend the vacation months in working at the business which the parent expects to pass over to him in the future, states that he pays the son double the amount which he could be expected to receive for the same work outside of his father's establishment, but only on the condition that half of his salary be invested in Baby Bonds. In this manner the father expects to teach the son thrifty habits which, he says, will be of greater use to him in after life than anything else he could learn.

Baby Bonds come in $10 denominations. Bear six per cent. interest and are secured by first mortgages on local real estate. There are also a number of larger bonds in $500 denominations, which bear the same rate of interest and are secured in the same manner. For further details regarding either, see the Wildwood Sales company, Shoaff building.—Advertisement

Brotherhoods Declare Only Surrender by Roads Or Congressional Action Can Avert Threatened Strike.

Washington, Aug. 26—With negotiations for averting the threatened railway strike practically at a deadlock, President Wilson today suddenly went to the capitol and conferred with administration leaders over the possibility of legislation.

The president conferred with Democratic Leader Kern and Chairman Newlands, of the interstate commerce commission, who, it was understood, after a canvass of the congressional situation, had concluded it was feasable to get through congress before adjournment as an amendment to the pending bill to increase the membership of the interstate commerce commission, some sort of an expression that the railways should be authorized to make rate increases to meet higher wages and to provide some sort of machinery for arbitration for similar disputes in the future, possibly along the lines of the Canadian commission.

Just before the president went to the capitol the brotherhood leaders, impatient at the delay of the railroad executives in replying to the president's last proposal, declared that only the unqualified concession of the eight-hour day or some action by congress to cause the government to operate the railroads could prevent the threatened strike.

On all hands the president's visit to the capitol was taken as indicating that the situation had reached a crisis. Late this afternoon the railroad executives were working on their communication to President Wilson. Among the railway executives it was said that any plan for legislation suggested by the president would have to be considered, but that the inclinations of the railway heads was to stand solidly on their demand for the arbitration of the present dispute.

When he finished conferring with Senators Kern and Newlands, President Wilson came to the door of his room and said to inquirers: "I came here on certain matters of legislation. That is all I can say now."

Late this afternoon the railroad executives adjourned without having finished their statement to President Wilson and their attitude was announced as unchanged.

After making the announcement President Wilson returned to the white house without conferring with any one else, and without making any further explanation of his visit. Senator Newlands stated positively that no joint session of congress had been arranged.

Washington, Aug. 26.—The threatened railway strike situation took on added tensity today as the railway executives continued their deliberations over the form of their counter proposal to President Wilson's plan and the brotherhood leaders silently awaited the next move.

The executives have been told that the men's leaders expect difficulty in restraining them after tonight.

The presidents worked steadily all morning and the forepart of the afternoon carefully phrasing their statement to President Wilson, but shortly afternoon had taken no final vote on it.

As has been outlined officially, it declines to concede the eight-hour day without arbitration and investigation of its application to railroading, but makes some concessions as to collateral issues.

The effect of the executives' counter proposal will be to pass the issue back to the brotherhoods and the outlook is variously described by those in touch with the negotiations.

CHILDREN UNDER 16 MUST BE KEPT IN

More stringent regulations were thrown around an effort to check infantile paralysis in Fort Wayne, Saturday.

Orders came from the board of health that all children under sixteen years be excluded from churches as well as Sunday schools. Children under 16 were forbidden in the market square area, and many persons called at the offices of the health board regarding certificates of health, advised taken out by those leaving the city.

Dr. J. H. Gilpin, secretary of the board of health, reported no new cases of the disease early Saturday. There are now six cases, all in check. Decision to disperse children under 16 from market square did not come until Saturday morning, when several patrons of the market complained of possible contagion.

Ministers Will Comply.

Ministers of the city have been notified regarding the attendance of children under 16 at church services. The orders of the health board will be immediately complied with.

While it is optional with parents to have their children examined, if they be under 16, before leaving the city, yet the health board strongly advises it. The family physician should make the examination and certify the results to Dr. Gilpin or Dr. Gilpin should be consulted for an examination. The health board suggests such a course to protect persons with children, who might be questioned by health officers in other cities regarding the physical condition of their children.

Get No Trace of Bandit Who Shot Woman Banker

Seymour, Ind., Aug. 26.—The search all night and early today for the bandit who shot and wounded Miss Nora Hunsucker, assistant cashier of the bank at Medora, when he demanded $5,000 from her yesterday afternoon, failed to disclose any trace of the man.

The bandit was thought to have been surrounded in a cornfield last night, but the posse of 500 men waited until daylight to venture into the field. The bandit was chased into the field after he had fired several shots at those who were in his way.

Miss Hunsucker was shot in the mouth. Her condition is not serious. The man made no attempt to take the money in the bank after he fired the shot.

Miss Hunsucker was removed to a hospital at Seymour and later was taken to her home at Vallonia. After she had been attended by a surgeon she was permitted to describe briefly her encounter with the bandit. He approached the cashier's window, where she was at work, she said, and immediately demanded $5,000.

Miss Hunsucker attempted to argue with the intruder, but when threatened with death pleaded with him not to shoot, but to take what money was in sight. At almost the instant she uttered her appeal the bandit fired, whether by accident or design is not known.

As the shot rang out the robber dashed from the bank and fled from the village before the few persons on the street could stop him. Pursuit was hurriedly organized and several persons caught sight of the fugitive before he entered the cornfield in which he took hiding.

The bandit is described as about 35 year sold, wearing a long tan coat and a soft hat. It is said he wore automobile goggles as he entered the bank, but he was unmasked when he approached the cashier's window.

Miss Hunsucker had been employed in the bank a number of years. She assisted her brother, J. L. Hunsucker, cashier, until his death in 1908 and continued her work under H. C. McCoun, the present cashier. McCoun had just begun his vacation and in his absence Miss Hunsucker was in charge of the bank.

FOE FLEET IS VICTOR

Helm's Defense Goes Down Before Invaders in the Naval War Game.

MYTHICAL INVADING ARMY IS LANDING

Tactics Make Long Island Shore Point of Landing of Enemies.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 26.—The defending squadron under Rear-Admiral Helm has been destroyed by the hostile fleet under Admiral Mayo in the navy war game and an invading army was being landed in theory on the shore of Long island this afternoon.

The "red" and "blue" fleets had been engaged in battle, the culmination of the navy war game, since 5 o'clock this morning off Scotland lightship, Sandy Hook. Up to noon, by the umpire's decision, the battleships Nevada and Texas and the destroyers Wadsworth and Tucker of the enemy fleet, the scout cruiser Birmingham and the destroyers Benham, Fanning, Balch, Drayton and several others of the "blue" defending fleet had been lost in action.

Many other vessels may have been constructively lost, but orders to the commanders of the two fleets were that ships regarded as sunk should proceed to port immediately and their arrival should not be reported. The battle was fought with every man of each ship's company at his proper station, but the firing was done with the small calibre batteries, employed in training turret crews. They are one-pounder guns mounted upon the twelve and fourteen-inch weapons of the main batteries so aranged that the sighting is done through the use of the mechanism of the big gun.

MOTORCYCLIST IS PAINFULLY INJURED

John Rosencrance is Hurt on Bass Road When He Hits Telephone Pole.

John Rosencrance, 2232 Hoagland avenue, was very painfully injured at 8 o'clock Saturday morning when he struck a telephone pole with his motorcycle on Deer Park avenue near the Bass farm. He was traveling at a rate of speed which made it impossible for him to make the turn. He slid into the ditch and then struck the telephone pole.

He struck the pole with his head and suffered a deep, long gash on his right leg. His knee cap was also badly hurt. The front of the motorcycle was badly damaged.

He was rendered unconscious and a man in an automobile who chanced to pass picked up the injured man. He took him as far as Runion avenue and Main street where he helped him to the sidewalk and continued his journey up Runion avenue.

Men on the corner helped the injured young man into a nearby store and called the police ambulance. He was taken to St. Joe hospital where his injuries were attended. Later in the morning he was removed to his home.

The young man was on his way to Tri-Lake where members of his family are spending the summer vacation.

CHARGE FRENCH WITH MERCILESS CRUELTY

Exterminate All Germans in Captured Trenches Says Berlin.

Berlin, Aug. 26.—The charge that the French have an organized force whose duty it is to exterminate all the Germans found in captured trenches, is made in a statement issued today by the Overseas news agency as follows:

"The French some time ago added a new fighting system which is the most cowardly and flagrant violation of the laws of war developed up to this time. Coincident reports confirm the fact, not known until now, that within companies, special detachments have been formed with express orders to remain behind in captured treinches and exterminate all Germans yet alive. These troops are called 'nettoyeurs,' (cleaners or sweepers.)

"When the French storming columns succeed in crossing a trench the 'nettoyeurs' enter and start the work of cleaning the trenches of all the living. Hand grenades are thrown in the dugouts where there are often wounded men. Those who escape from the hand grenades are killed by revolver and knife when they attempt to come out. This terrible slaughter is continued from man to man. Every man whether wounded or not, armed or not, is mercilessly stabbed or shot."

HUGHES TO SPEAK HERE THIS FALL

Republican Candidate for Presidency Coming Probably Late in September

Charles E. Hughes, republican candidate for president, will speak in Fort Wayne probably late in September or the forepart of October. Announcement to this effect has been made by Jesse Eschbach, chairman of the republican bureau of speakers for Indiana.

For some time District Chairman Harry G. Hogan has been making an effort to secure the presidential candidate and assurance that he is coming has caused general rejoicing among the republicans of the district. Mr. Eschbach, of the republican bureau of speakers, says he has the assurances of the national speakers' bureau that Hughes will come to Indiana, which will be one of the principal battlegrounds of the campaign.

Mr. Hughes' visit to Fort Wayne will be the occasion for a big demonstration and as soon as the date is known to a certainty preparations will be made for the meeting. Judging from the number of meetings that both the democrats and republicans are planning to hold here the Twelfth congressional district will be Indiana's principal battlefield.

35 ALONE LEFT FROM $14,000,000 FORTUNE.

New York, Aug. 26.—Patrick Calhoun, grandson of the famous statesman and prominently identified with the San Francisco street car system until a few years ago, testified in a receivership proceeding here that five dollars was the only tangible asset remaining of a fortune of $14,000,000 possessed by him five years ago. The proceedings became known today. Financial reverses following the earthquake and fire in San Francisco were responsible for his losses, he asserted. Receivership proceedings were brought against Calhoun in a suit for office rent

GERMANS RUSH THE FIGHTING

Strike Blow in Champagne While Resisting Somme Advance of Allies.

Today's War News Given in Summary

While determinedly resisting the allied advance on the Somme front in northern France the Germans are launching strong attacks in other sectors of the western battle line, the latest of which movements reported being in the Champagne region. Near Tahure in the Champagne the scene of some of the hardest fighting in the French offensive of last September, German troops last night charged French positions and succeeded in penetrating them. Subsequently they were driven out, Paris declares. This attack followed quickly upon an assault by the Germans on the position southeast of Verdun, which the French repulsed by a counter attack, and was carried out simultaneously with attacks in the region of Verdun itself and along the Somme front.

The point selected for the Verdun offensive was between Fleury and Thiaumont, where the French scored their recent advance. The Germans, although they subjected the French lines to a heavy bombardment, were unable to make any gain, according to Paris. On the Somme the German counter-thrust was directed at hill 121, near Maurepos, past which village the French have hammered their way in attempts to envelope Clery and clear the road north of the river to Peronne. This attack also was repulsed, the Paris bulletin declares. — — — — — —

Military activity is developing in the Balkans. Sofia reports an important victory over the Servians on the Bulgarian right wing and announces that on the other flank the Bulgarians have reached the Greek Ægean coast.

Balkan political developments are being followed with intense interest, particularly the attitude of Roumania. Dispatches today indicate further military preparations by this kingdom, including an increase of the extraordinary credit for the army of 200,000,000 francs.

Vienna claims the checking of Russian attempts to advance in the Carpathians toward the Hungarian border, but Petrograd asserts that further gains in this region have been made by the Russians.

The British admiralty announces the torpedoing of a British naval auxiliary in the North sea, including the loss of twenty-three men.

Paris, Aug. 26.—(Noon.)—After an intense bombardment last night the Germans launched an infantry attack west of Tahur in the Champagne. They penetrated the French position, the war office announced today, but subsequently were expelled. German attacks on the Somme and Verdun fronts were repulsed.

The German attack on the Somme front was made at hill 121, near the town of Maurepas, recently captured by the French. On the Verdun front east of the Meuse the Germans attacked the French line between Fleury and Thiau-

FRANK THEURE HIT BY AUTO AND INJURED

Frank Theure, aged 36 years residing at 902 East Superior street, was struck by an automobile owned and driven by John Hey, 353 Killea avenue, at 10:30 o'clock Saturday morning at Clinton and Berry streets. He was taken to St. Joseph's hospital in the police ambulance, where it was found that his injuries consisted of several bad bruises and a deep cut on his head. The attending physician states that the skull is not fractured.

According to witnesses the automobile driver was not to blame, as Mr. Theire stepped directly in front of the machine, which is said to have been traveling very slowly.

WILL BEGIN WORK OF RECRUITING SOON

Second Lieutenant Howard Miller, of company E, First Indiana infantry, who was detailed to Fort Banjamin Harrison, arrived in Fort Wayne with three assistants, Friday evening, and announces that he will begin work of recruiting the first of next week. His asisstants are Sergeant Leroy Likens, of Auburn; Corporal Allen Ralston, of Michigan City, and Private Patsy Pirchio.

Saturday was spent in securing quarters for his assistants and seeking a good location for the recruiting office. It is very likely that the offices in the Swinney block will be secured, but no decision was reached Saturday.

Recruiting will not only be done in Fort Wayne, but also in surrounding towns and cities.

FIRE CHIEF FINDS OIL SOAKED WASTE

Fire Chief Henry Hilbrecht, while investigating the origin of the fire which damaged the plant of the Central foundry on East Wayne street Thursday night, discovered a quantity of oil-soaked and charred waste at the origin of the fire. This find strengthens the suspicion that the blaze was of incendiary origin.

The fire chief is of the opinion that the waste was taken from journal boxes on railroad cars. There are a number of sidetracks near the plant and scraps of waste were found, indicating that the firebug had approached from the west, dropping bits of waste as he walked along.

Detective Sergt. Walter Immel has been assigned to the case, but thus far no further clew has been found.

Berlin Version of Execution of German Woman by the French.

Berlin, Aug. 26.—"In Marseilles on Aug. 22 a woman named Pfaat, twenty-eight years old, was shot as a spy," says the Overseas news agency. "She had appealed against the death sentence of the court martial at Marseilles but the Paris court of appeals rejected her plea.

"The Cologne Gazette states this is not the first case in which the French have put a woman to death during the war. It recalls the agitation of the English and French press in regard to the case of Miss Edith Cavell, whose execution for high treason and continued spying caused these newspapers to express indignation. The Cologne Gazette asks whether the same ideas will hold good now that a German woman has been put to death by the French."

A Marseilles dispatch of Aug. 22 told of the execution of Felice Pfaat as a spy.

The charge against Miss Edith Cavell, who was put to death in Brussels last fall, was given in dispatches at that time as having assisted British, French and Belgians to escape from Belgium.

WANTS ALL CLOCKS ADVANCED AN HOUR

Pittsburg, Pa., Aug. 26.—A movement to conserve one hour of sunshine every day in the year for every man, woman and child in the United States was announced today by the executive committee of the Pittsburg chamber of commerce which will carry the matter to the United States chamber of commerce with the plea that it be submitted to a referendum of the 250,000 business men who compose that body. The plan is to have clocks throughout the country advanced one hour, thus allowing everybody to begin the working day an hour earlier and quit an hour earlier. As all sections would be affected, the system, the chamber argues, would not interfere with time regulation as provided by the four zones of standard time.

Chicago Millionaire, Shipwrecked In Far North, Rescued by McCulloch

On Board United States Coast Guard Cutter McCulloch, Bering Sea, Aug. 26.—(Via Wireless to Seattle).—The power schooner Great Bear, carrying the Arctic expedition headed by John Borden, of Chicago, and Captain Louis Lane, of Seattle, was wrecked on a pinnacle rock in Bering Sea, Aug. 10.

The vessel was a total loss, but the entire party landed safely on St. Matthew's island, where they were found yesterday by the McCulloch.

The members of the party aboard the Great Bear were able to land tents and provisions on St. Matthew's island and lived comfortably 15 days until the McCulloch, which had been sent from Nome to search for the vessel, found them.

Mr. Borden and his entire party were taken aboard the McCulloch, which started back to Nome last night.

Charles M. Roberts Gets Heavy Sentence in City Court for Desertion.

Charles M. Roberts, who deserted his wife on June 8, 1916, and left her alone without any means of support, was found guilty of the charge in the city court Saturday morning. He was fined ten dollars and sentenced to the county jail for one hundred days. He is to work on the county roads, wielding a pick and shovel for 120 days. For each day he works one dollar will be paid to his wife for her support.

Roberts was arrested in Marion, Ind., and was brought to Fort Wayne for trial. His wife, who is sickly, has been staying with some relatives at 1011 Swinney avenue. It was brought out by witnesses that for the past three months Mrs. Roberts had received a total of one dollar for her support.

For Child Neglect.

Attorney Kleckamp entered a plea of not guilty for William Waltke, who was arrested on a charge of child neglect. The evidence showed that he was $150 in arrears and the city court ordered that he make a payment of $20 today and five dollars a week. The payments are to be made to the city clerk.

Case Continued Indefinitely.

The case against Mike Koehler, 3638 Lafayette street, who was charged with allowing his horse to run at large, was continued indefinitely. It was alleged that a blind horse unfastened itself in the stall and roamed around in a neighbor's cabbage patch.

Other Police Cases.

John Ryan, a laborer, raised a disturbance in a South Calhoun street restaurant Friday evening, while intoxicated. He was arrested and Saturday morning was fined $5 and costs.

The case of Butch Van Meter, aged fourteen years, charged with jumping trains, was certified to the juvenile court under custody of the probation officer.

Tom Gibson, colored, was carrying a large and dangerous revolver in his pocket Friday evening. He started to drink heavy and began to threaten to kill another colored man who he says insulted his wife. He was arrested on a charge of carrying concealed weapons. The judge assessed a fine of $25 and costs.

The case against John Foley for loitering was continued until August 31 and bail was fixed at $25.

MONTGOMERY WANTS HENRY TO ORGANIZE

C. Henry, county agent, will go to Crawfordsville, Thursday, August 31, to assist the Montgomery county farmers in organizing a live stock breeders' association.

Montgomery county is one of the most progressive in the state in an agricultural way. Trout, whose exhibitions of stock at fairs are widely known.

A. J. Hutchins, Adams county agent, has been in the city making arrangements to succeed Mr. Henry, September 1. While Mr. Henry leaves Tuesday for Lafayette to begin duties with Purdue university preliminary to active service, yet he will be in Allen county until about October 1, assisting Mr. Hutchins in his new field. D. O. McComb, county superintendent of schools, made the statement Friday.

At the reception, Mrs. Florence Bayard Hilles, of Delaware, Colorado, organizer of the woman's party, is to thank the nominee for his endorsement of national suffrage. Later Mr. Hughes expects to pay a brief visit to John C. Schaffer, newspaper publisher, at his country home, Ken Caryle, in the foothills southwest of Denver. Mr. Hughes' principal Denver address will be delivered tonight at the auditorium. Immediately afterward he will leave for Estes park, where he will enjoy an outing until Sept. 1.

SHARK SHOW NOW IN A NEW YORK MUSEUM

New York, Aug. 26.—To satisfy the extraordinary interest in sharks due to the appearance of the fish in large numbers on the north Atlantic coast this summer and the death of three bathers from this cause, the American museum of natural history today opened a special exhibit showing a man-eater, a blue shark and a ground shark.

"All sharks which have been captured around here since the shark scare," said J. H. Nichols, assistant curator of the museum, who staged the exhibit, "have been undoubtedly this common ground shark."

Visitors to the exhibition are greeted by the following printed notice: "The danger of being attacked by a shark about here is probably less than that of being struck by lightning."

Mr. and Mrs. Willis Hattersley have returned from a trip to points on the Great Lakes.

In Hysterics Mrs. Adams Declares Her Course Was Justified.

Macon, Ga., Aug. 26. Accompanied by a military escort, the body of Capt. Edgar J. Spratling, F company, Fifth regiment, national guard of Georgia, who was shot and killed at the state mobilization camp here yesterday by Mrs. H. C. Adams, of Atlanta, early today was taken to his home in Atlanta. Burial will be at Opelika, Ala. Mrs. Adams, formerly a patient of Captain Spratling, who in civil life was a physician, last night was held by a coroner's jury for the killing.

In the Bibb county jail here she asserted she shot Captain Spratling because of attentions paid her while she was in his office at Atlanta. After several hours in jail Mrs. Adams became hysterical, but frequently declared that when she goes to trial her course will be shown to have been justified. Her husband, a laundry wagon driver, is expected here today. Mrs. Maud Monk, a trained nurse, questioned by officers of the national guard at Camp Harris last night, is said to have declared she saw a letter to Captain Spratling from Mrs. Adams threatening to kill him if he did not see her.

Officers at the camp indicated a belief that illness due to nervous disorders caused Mrs. Adams to think Captain Spratling had acted improperly to her.

mont after a heavy bombardment, but were able to make no advance.

Aerial engagements continued all along the front. Three German aeroplanes were shot down in the Somme sector, one near Craon and another on the Verdun front. Six others were damaged and two German captive balloons were destroyed.

Greek Fort Captured.

The Bulgarians have attacked and captured the Greek fort of Startila, after killing its commander, Changas, and the entire garrison, which offered spirited resistance, says a Saloniki dispatch to the Matin. The dispatch is dated Aug. 23 and was delayed.

A dispatch from Avlona today states that the Italians have occupied Porto Palermo and the summit of Mount Kalarat, in southern Albania, in order to watch the Albanian coast, north of Cape Kephali, fifty miles southeast of Avlona, in which district there is said to be an Austrian submarine base.

The territory occupied by the Italians is quasi-Greek. The opinion of Rome newspapers, however, is that Greece will not protest the occupation.

HOLDS PROTEST MEETING

Saloniki Objects to Occupation of Greek Territory by Bulgars.

Saloniki, Aug. 26.—Via Paris, 5:55 a. m.)—A large popular meeting was held here last night to protest against the occupation of Greek territory by Bulgarians. That was followed by a demonstration for Venizelos and the singing of the national hymn. The crowd then marched to the headquarters of Gen. Sarrail entente commander, and sang the "Marseillaise." A formal protest against the Bulgarian occupation was drawn up and left with the prefect of police. Dispatches from Athens say the government is much concerned about the liberal party manifestation which is being organized for Sunday and threatens to hold counter demonstration of supporters of the king.

SERBIANS MEET DEFEAT.

Beaten by Bulgarians After Eighteen Consecutive Attacks.

Sofia, Aug. 26.—(Via London.)—After severe fighting on the Bulgarian right wing on the Macedonian front the Serbians have been defeated with very heavy losses and compelled to retire, the war office announced today. Eighteen consecutive attacks were made by the Serbians.

On the eastern end of the front Bulgarian forces have reached the Greek Aegean coast and put British cavalry detachments to flight. Several villages have been occupied by the Bulgarians.

BRITISH CRAFT SUNK; 23 DEAD.

Naval Auxiliary Sent Down by Germans in North Sea.

London, Aug. 26.—The torpedoing in the North sea of a British naval auxiliary, with the loss of 23 men, was announced officially today.

Eighty-seven men were saved. The torpedoed vessel was the armed boarding steamer Duke of Albany.

The Stifts-Tidende, of Ribe, Denmark, is quoted in a Reuter dispatch from Copenhagen, as saying the commander of the submarine which sank the Lusitania was Captain Max Valentine, son of the dean of Sondersburg cathedral. Captain Valentine, the newspaper says, has been decorated with a number of orders since the sinking of the liner, including the Iron Cross of the first class and the Hohenzollern house order with swords, a special distinction which is the personal gift of the German emperor.

British aeroplanes have made another dash over Belgium, on this occasion penetrating to the vicinity of Namur, 46 miles southeast of Brussels and bombarding German air sheds. One aeroplane is missing. An official account of these operations issued today says: "Early Friday morning an attack was carried out by naval aeroplanes upon enemy airship sheds near Anur. Sheds were successfully bombarded and two of them were hits, but due to low lying clouds it was not possible to observe the damage done. One machine failed to return."

A heavy attack made by the Prussian guard against British positions at Thiepval, on the Somme front, was repulsed by the Worcestershire and Wiltshire regiments, it was officially announced this afternoon.

DRIVE AUSTRIANS BACK.

Petrograd, Aug. 26.—In the foothills of the Carpathians, in Galicia, the Russians have pressed back Austrian forces and occupied the village of Guta and reached the sources of the rivers Bystritza and Bystritza-Nadvorna, in the region of Rafalov, according to an official announcement.

The Russians are pressing the advantage recently gained over the Turks in southern Turkish Armenia and report the continued flight of what remains of the Turkish fourth division, defeated in the recent fighting. After capturing Mush the Russians kept on and occupied a ridge beyond the town.

WILLIAM TRICKETT GILES.

REJECTED KAISER'S AGENT.

King Ferdinand Says Proposed Visit Would Be Inopportune.

Paris, Aug. 26.—According to information from diplomatic sources, says a wireless dispatch from Berne, Emperor William of Germany wrote to King Ferdinand of Roumania that he intended to send Duke Albrecht of Mecklenburg on a special mission to him with regard to the position of Roumania.

King Ferdinand replied, adds the dispatch, that the mission would be inopportune because as a constitutional monarch he would be obliged to refer the envoy to his ministers and in the circumstances he preferred that any communication from the German government should be received through ordinary diplomatic channels.

GERMANS REPULSE FRENCH.

Berlin, Aug. 26. Attacks last night by the British in the Thiepval and Foureaux wood sectors on the Somme front and by the French near Maurepas were repulsed, the war office announced today. In the Champagne, northwest of Tahure, French trenches were raided and 46 prisoners captured.

POWERS EXCHANGE VIEWS.

Athens, Aug. 26. The present political and military situation, says the Patris, has resulted in an exchange of views among the entente powers regarding the attitude to be taken towards Greece. It is questioned by entente diplomatists, the newspaper state, wether the measures agreed to by Greece in response to the demands of the allies, including demobilization of the army and a government offering, all necessary guarantees for benevolent neutrality, are now sufficient, in view of the new situation.

has no plans for the future. He will probably remain at the Randall for a short time to assist the new managers.

Because of Mrs. Randall's multitude of activities she could not devote as much time to the hotel as she thought she should, and for that reason consented to the leasing of it. The hotel has never done a better business and is now in a most thriving condition.

Experienced Hotel Men.

Messrs. Hassinger and Bonine are both experienced hotel men and come to Fort Wayne highly recommended. They have a wide acquaintance among the traveling public and plan to make the Randall one of the most popular hotels in northern Indiana.

The Randall hotel is one of the pioneer institutions of Fort Wayne. There are men on the road who would stop nowhere else. They have been stopping there for years. The hotel is located on Harrison street at the head of Columbia street.

Another Lease Closed.

Glassman & Kopp, of Cleveland, dealers in raincoats, umbrellas and similar articles, closed a five-year lease Saturday morning for the business room at 1512 South Calhoun street belonging to Don Dondero. Messrs. Glassman & Kopp expect to open a store here on Sept. 10. The property was leased through Joe Goldstine, local real estate dealer.

TRAILING NEW TYPE OF WHITE SLAVERY

New York, Aug. 26.—District Attorney Swann announced today that he had assigned one of his assistants to make a special investigation of evidence that manufacturers here are employing women to attract buyers who come to New York from all parts of the country. The district attorney's office has been engaged lately in an effort to stamp out the practice of "white slavery." Mr. Swann said that he had unearthed enough facts to convince him that men who induce women to meet buyers may be indicted as white slavers. The district attorney's attention was called to this alleged practice among certain manufacturers by the formal complaint made by one business man against another, charging him with having enticed the complainant's wife into an evil life.

Some of the railways' executives say their proposition is positively their last; some of the men's leaders stand firmly against arbitration. Others on both sides have hopes that out of it will come further negotiations delaying a strike and possibly averting it.

Statement Is Significant.

A statement issued by the federal board of mediation today on the settlements it had conducted was regarded as significant. It described a report about to be made to the senate which will disclose that in every case of settlements conducted under the old Erdman act or the later Newlands law, substantial advantages have been won by the employes through arbitration.

The only instance recorded where the men did not benefit was a settlement made without the participation of the federal mediators.

Serious But Not Hopeless.

President Wilson regards the situation as serious but has not given up hope of a settlement.

No word in regard to the situation having arrived, employes' meeting adjourned shortly after noon until 2 o'clock. Meanwhile the presidents of the four brotherhoods remained at their hotel awaiting a summons from the white house. They were without official knowledge of the railroad heads' position.

Crisis Believed at Hand.

The crisis appeared imminent today while the railroad presidents prepared a counter-proposal for final submission to President Wilson.

On the acceptability of this proposal by the railway brotherhoods' committee of 640 depended largely whether the presidents' personal efforts to mediate shall fail. Heretofore the brotherhood leaders have stood firmly against any plan to arbitrate their demand for an eight hour day as a basis in determining wages.

The railroad executives met early today to perfect the draft of their proposal, and were expected to send it immediately to President Wilson who had an engagement with the brotherhood leaders about noon.

Rail Presidents' Contention.

The railroad presidents contend for arbitration on the ground that a basic eight hour day, sought by the brotherhoods, is actually a question of wages rather than of working hours, and consequently is properly subject to arbitration. Further they propose that if the arbitration board which might be the interstate commerce commission or some other public body to be created, finds wage increases should be granted, the order would be considered effective from the time arbitration begins and a fund would be established by the railroads to insure such back payments. The employes would be bound not to make further demands nor to strike pending negotiations.

The proposal would amount to a partial rejection of President Wilson's plan whereby the railroads were to concede the eight hour day and all other questions in dispute were to be arbitrated. Some members of the brotherhood committee, although still hostile to arbitrating the eight hour day demand, were said to favor taking the railroads' proposal under advisement and continuing negotiations next week.

In Continuous Session.

Brotherhood leaders had received no official advices regarding the railroad presidents' proposition when the regular daily meeting of the employes' committee convened. The workmen's committee planned to remain in continuous session until they heard from President Wilson, who had promised them some word by noon. The four brotherhood heads went into secret session early this morning to consider the official report of the railroads' position, which they had obtained from newspapers. They had received no word from the white house and did not expect to confer with the president, they said, until after he had received a delegation from the railroad representatives.

Opinion was divided among the employes as to how the railroads' proposal would be received. None of them thought that it would be accepted without qualification, and a large number of them declared that if the railroads continued to insist upon arbitration a strike inevitably would follow. Many of the men still were desirous of leaving for their homes tonight and had made every preparation to do so. A suggestion frequently heard was that the committee of 640 be permitted to go home immediately and the negotiations be left entirely in the hands of the brotherhood heads. The railway executives went into session at 10 o'clock to take final action on the proposal they will submit to President Wilson. Since the executives determined upon the nature of their proposal and drafted their reply last night, the committee of eight has gone over and smoothed down the wording of the letter to the president. In their meeting this morning the railway executives will merely approve the committee's final draft, which then will be submitted to President Wilson.

EMINENT CHURCHMAN IS DEAD AT PEORIA

Archbishop Spalding, Weakened by Heat Wave, Has Passed Away.

Peoria, Ill., Aug. 26.—Archbishop John Lancaster Spalding, noted prelate of the Roman Catholic church in Illinois and a resident of Peoria continuously since 1877, when he was chosen for the position of bishop of the newly created Peoria diocese, died at his residence here yesterday afternoon at 3:20 o'clock.

He had been ill for a number of years, having suffered a paralytic stroke in 1906.

Members of the archbishop's family, summoned to his bedside a week ago, were in the room when he breathed his last.

The mind of the prelate remained clear up to within twelve hours of his death. No pain whatsoever was evident at any time during the last illness. His condition was borne with fortitude, and his every thought was for the welfare of the church and of the many parishioners in this city and in the diocese over which he presided for years.

Physicians in attendance report that the recent heat wave left the aged prelate in a weakened condition, and his decline was rapid.

Funeral on Tuesday.

The funeral of the archbishop will be held on Tuesday at 10 a. m., in the St. Mary's Cathedral, over which he presided for years. It is expected that Cardinal Gibbons of Baltimore, will attend.

Bishop Spalding was born in Lebanon, Ky., June 2, 1840. He was educated at Mount St. Mary's college, Cincinnati, Ohio, and then he went to Louvain, Belgium, where he received his degree of doctor of divinity in 1863. After being ordained he went to Rome for a special course of study in the Belgian college and in 1865 returned to the United States prepared for his life's work.

He was assigned to the Cathedral at Louisville, Ky., and in addition to missionary duties, he acted as secretary to Bishop Lavialle. He remained in Louisville until 1869 when at his own request he was charged with founding a parish for negroes. Before he left Louisville in 1872 he had built and paid for a church and parish house for Roman Catholic negroes.

He moved to New York shortly after the death of his uncle, the Most Reverend M. J. Spalding, the archbishop of Baltimore, and devoted several years to writing a biography of that prelate. He served as an assistant priest at St. Michael's church, New York, for several years and while in this position was appointed bishop of Peoria.

The Peoria diocese under Bishop Spalding's direction grew from fifty-one to 250 churches.

Democratic Nominee Makes Prompt Answer to G. O. P. Keynote.

Sullivan, Ind., Aug. 26.—John R. M. Adair opened the democratic campaign in Sullivan county yesterday as the principal speaker at the Merom chautauqua on democratic day before a crowd of 5,500 persons. The first part of his address was devoted entirely to answering the speech of James P. Goodrich at Greencastle Thursday night, which opened the republican campaign in the state.

Adair objected to what he called the inconsistency of Goodrich's complaint that the democratic party had created new offices, when at the same time, in answer to Adair's recent addresses, he admitted he would not repeal a single one of the laws passed during the Ralston administration. Adair declared that as long as the republican nominee for governor refuses to stand for repeal of these laws he has no right to complain on general lines, failing to specify what particular portion he would do away with.

Fails to Give Credit.

"He fails to point out the real effective work of the administration and talks long and loud about extravagance, but does not point out wherein it lies," Adair said. "He spoke of the increased cost of the maintenance of the state institutions, but was not fair enough to tell his auditors that the number of state institutions now cared for is more than 40 per cent greater than under the Hanly administration.

"We democrats take it as the highest recommendation that Goodrich shows that the increased cost of maintaining these institutions only amounts to 25.9 per cent, while the number of institutions has increased more than 40 per cent. I shall be glad if he makes that statement in every one of his speeches in Indiana.

Increase Held Justified.

"At a later date I will go into detail and show fully and completely how my friend Mr. Goodrich has sought to cover up the fact that, through efficiency and economy of the present democratic administration, the debt of the state has been entirely paid off, our institutions placed upon an economical basis and the affairs of the state generally managed better than ever before. He should know that wages have increased and food products are higher, and he ought to be fair enough to admit that expenditures would naturally be higher. It is just as unfair to undertake to mislead by covering up a part of the truth as it is to specifically state an untruth. The fact remains that the democratic party in Indiana has made good from every standpoint."

FIRMLY BELIEVES CROCKERLAND REAL

Admiral Peary is Confident of Existence of Far North Region.

Washington, Aug. 26.—Rear Admiral Robert E. Peary reiterates his confidence in the existence of Crockerland, and his belief that he saw it in July, 1906. The admiral's statement, telegraphed to the Tribune from his summer place in Maine, was called forth by the fact that Ensign Fitzhugh Green, the naval officer, assigned to the MacMillan Crockerland Arctic expedition, made no report of whether the expedition found Crockerland in announcing to the navy department his safe arrival at Copenhagen on Aug. 10. After quoting from his original narrative of his expedition the story of his first view of what he believed to be Crockerland, Admiral Peary said:

"It may be that McMillan and I were both misled by the nearly permanent clouds of condensation over persistent lanes of water, or unusual refraction which occurs in the Arctic regions, may have lifted into view land that was in reality well below the horizon, and my estimate of the distance of Crockerland may have been too moderate. It will be well to await the completion of Stefensson's discoveries before dismissing Crockerland."

SHARK ATTACKS FISHERMAN.

ENTIRE CITY PUT IN FEAR BY MYSTERIOUS NOTES AND ATTACKS AT EAST LIVERPOOL, OHIO.

At left, Mrs. Irma Little; at right, Mrs. Florence Anderson, victims of attacks by the mysterious note writers, and copies of notes they received.

East Liverpool, O., Aug. 23.—Residents of East Liverpool are keeping their doors locked even when they are inside their own homes as a result of the mysterious sending of threats and attacks on two women.

Strangers in the city and loungers are looked upon with suspicion, especially by women, each of whom fears she may be the next victim of the mysterious person or persons sending letters threatening violence.

A terse warning, scribbled on a scrap of paper and unsigned, is the herald of the person who has terrified the city—a person so far unknown to the police.

"We'll get you tonight," read a note received by Mrs. Irma Little. Not long afterward a man knocked at the door of her apartment and threw a phial of acid at Mrs. Little when she opened the door. She shielded her face, but her arms were burned.

"We'll get you tonight," read a note thrust into the home of Mrs. Florence Anderson. An hour later Mrs. Anderson was attacked by a man in the basement of her home.

Previously Mrs. Anderson had received a threat and a police guard was placed about her house. When nothing happened the guard was withdrawn. The same day the second note was received and the attack occurred.

Mrs. Little has received three notes since the attempt to throw acid into her face. The first read: "I'll get your pretty face next time." The second read: "I'll get you yet," and the third: "You will not smile with your eyes much longer."

On account of the difference in the methods of attack on the two women and the mention of "we" in the notes, the police believe more than one man is terrorizing the women of the city.

The police are following every clue and guarding the home of Mrs. Anderson. The home of Mrs. Little will be guarded also when she returns from Atlantic City, where she fled after receiving the last note.

Mrs. Little is wife of the owner of a large office building; Mrs. Anderson is the wife of the secretary of a clothing firm.

Mrs. Little's father, Charles Saylers, a contractor, says he believes the attack on his daughter was meant to wreak vengeance on him, but he is unable to assign any reason for such vengeance.

Saylers has offered a reward of $500 for capture of his daughter's assailant.

NEWS OF FORT WAYNE'S NEIGHBORS

Florence Watson Demands $10,000 Damages from Winona Assembly.

Warsaw, Ind., Aug. 26.—A lawsuit which promises to develop into an unusually bitter legal fight was filed in the circuit court when Florence Watson, a resident of Winona Lake, brought suit against the Winona Assembly and Bible Conference for $10,000 damages.

In her complaint she maintains that in spite of the fact that Winona Lake is an incorporated town and maintains a United States postoffice she is being denied the liberties of a resident of an incorporated town and also that her business has been practically ruined by the officers of the association.

A fence is maintained around the town and guards are stationed at the entrance and exits, denying anyone egress or ingress unless he has a ticket the price of which ranges from 25 cents for a single admission to $5 for a season ticket.

The plaintiff charges that on July 3 she purchased a season ticket for $5 and because she refused to give the association 5 per cent of her gross earnings from her rooming and boarding house, as required by the association, her ticket was forcibly taken from her.

L. M. SHELDON IS DEAD.

Churubusco, Ind., Aug. 26.—Lawrence M. Sheldon, aged 30 years, 8 months and 14 days, who had been ill for several months with bronchial trouble, died Friday forenoon at 11:30 o'clock at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs Cyrus Sheldon, who reside a mile east of Churubusco in Allen county. Mr. Sheldon was born in Allen county, December 11, 1885, and resided on the farm of his parents his entire life. Mr. Sheldon was a member of the U. B. church of Churubusco and a faithful member of the Excelsior class of that congregation. He leaves his parents, a half-sister, Mrs. Ada McBride of Allen county, three brothers, Mont, Floyd and Frank, at home. The funeral occurs Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the U. B. church in Churubusco, Rev. A. M. Cummins officiating; interment in the Eel River cemetery.

CRUELTY IS CHARGED

Decatur, Ind., Aug. 26.—Mrs. Jessie A. Miller has filed her petition in the circuit court, asking that she be divorced from William H. Miller, a well known farmer of Wabash township. According to the allegations of the petition, the couple were married on August 25, 1895, and their separation took place on Aug. 17, 1916, after a married life of about 21 years. The usual allegations of residence are also made. Cruel and inhuman treatment are the only grounds alleged in the complaint for the decree asked. The complaint is long and specifically sets out many instances, alleged to support the general allegation.

WAGON RUNS OVER BOY.

Six-Year-Old Son of Carl A. Harper, of Van Wert, Seriously Hurt.

Van Wert, Ohio, Aug. 26.—Lee, the six-year-old son of Carl A. Harper, foreman of the boiler department at the Cincinnati Northern shops, who resides on North Washington street, was terribly injured yesterday. Beginning Aug. 28, 1916, we will deliver current water bills which will become delinquent twenty (20) days after date of delivery.

Please do not fail to bring water bill with you and pay at new "Cashier's Window" in lobby.

Meters will be read every three (3) months, June, September, December and March, and bills will be rendered quarterly to consumers using more than the minimum. This is done in the interest of consumers and by so doing, any leaks appearing will be discovered early, thus preventing high water bills.

The minimum rate is Four Dollars ($4.00) per year and this permits the use of 14½ cubic feet (109 gals.) per day without extra cost.

All meters register in cubic feet, and bills are now figured in cubic feet. A cubic foot of water contains seven and one half (7½) gallons.

This department earnestly requests all consumers to read carefully information appearing on new "Water Bill" and co-operate with us by complying with same, to the mutual good of this big, essential city utility.

DAILY BIBLE READINGS FOR THE HOME

Ephesians 4:17-32.

17. This I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind.

18. Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart:

19. Who being past feeling have given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness.

20. But ye have not so learned Christ;

21. If so be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus:

22. That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts;

23. And be renewed in the spirit of your mind;

24. And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness.

25. Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbor: for we are members one of another.

26. Be ye angry, and sin not: let not the sun go down upon your wrath:

27. Neither give place to the devil.

28. Let him that stole steal no more: but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth.

29. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers.

30. And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption.

31. Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice:

32. And be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.

Berlin's Welcome to Koenig.

Berlin dispatches have graphically described the royal greeting given to Capt. Paul Koenig and his men of the merchant submarine Deutschland, on their arrival in Bremen on their successful return from the first trip of the big U-boat to American shores. The city was gaily bedecked with flags and other patriotic emblems and cheering throngs lined the banks of the Weser as the Deutschland steamed slowly up to its docks. Kaiser Wilhelm has sent his warmest congratulations to the men of the submarine on their achievement, and wealthy Bremen citizens have contributed a purse of nearly one hundred marks to be presented to the captain and crew as a further evidence of honor and appreciation for what they have succeeded in doing. All this is perfectly natural and to be expected. Moreover, it is amply justified, for the feat set a new world's record in submarine performance.

But what is of still more interest on this side of the water is the pronouncedly fine expression given by Captain Koenig in appreciation of the manner in which he was received in America, and of his treatment by the United States government in his departure for his return trip. No doubt there are many thousands of German people who have believed the American government partial to the cause of the entente allies. They have construed many American official acts as indicating antipathy to the Fatherland, and have honestly questioned the actual neutrality of the United States government. The statement of Captain Koenig to his people will most certainly dispel much of this misunderstanding. He unqualifiedly commended the treatment he received at the hands of American authorities as in exact line with fair and impartial neutrality, and declared that he had no complaint to make and no criticism to offer. It is extremely gratifying to have this full and free acknowledgment from such a source. It will do much toward removing past misunderstandings and toward strengthening the historic bond of friendship between the empire and the republic.

Mr. Adair, the democratic nominee for governor, has lost no time in making prompt reply to the keynote address of his rival in the race, Mr. Goodrich, in which the republican nominee charged Indiana democracy with extravagance in state affairs because expenses are higher now than ten years ago, but failed to be fair enough to admit that the number of state institutions now cared for has increased 49 per cent., while the increase in cost amounts to but little more than 25 per cent. As The Sentinel has previously pointed out, the issue is not so much whether expenditures are now greater than ten years ago as whether the state is adequately meeting new needs and getting dollar for dollar in value for the money it is expending. Nobody has yet taken the negative side of either of the latter two propositions.

Promoters of a prize-fight scheduled at Tulsa, Okla., on Labor day, declare they're going right ahead with the mill despite orders given by the state authorities that the bruising match must not be staged. We shall soon be edified by a demonstration of who's running Oklahoma—the state government or a coterie of the low-brow pugilistic gentry. Oklahoma has often been declared eccentric, freakish and peculiar, and one never can tell what's going to happen there, but it's usually what one doesn't expect.

We haven't anything like a close acquaintance with Leon M. Estabrook, chief of the United States bureau of crop estimates and an authority on food supplies, but he's an optimistic sort of soul. Mr. Estabrook is out with the prediction that the prices of foodstuffs are soon to come down, and he voices the belief that recent abnormal rates on staples will adjust themselves by next season. And perhaps Mr. Estabrook knows what he's talking about.

Victor Murdock, the auburn-haired Kansas progressive leader, has sailed on a three-months' tour of the orient—doubtless trying to forget what his old comrade, Colonel Roosevelt, has recently done to the cherished political infant on which both had builded such tremendous hopes. And, besides, Mr. Murdock doesn't intend to be put in the position of having to assume responsibiltiy for whatever may happen in November.

It's all well and good to give every possible consideration to the rights of the employes and the railway interests in this protracted squabble, but the public, as the innocent bystander, is the one, after all, whose interests are of first importance, and who will get hurt the worst if the strike should unfortunately eventuate.

MOTOR SPEEDING.

(Indianapolis News.)

From state highway commissioners, police chiefs and service commissions comes the complaint that the problem of the speeding motorist is the worst of traffic regulation. The highway commission of Iowa, in a recent service bulletin, expresses opinions that are interesting, if not particularly helpful.

There are in Iowa 150,000 licensed automobiles, and to judge from the bulletin few chauffeurs are content to drive at a reasonable rate of speed or to slow down for obstacles. "Iowans would object," reads the bulletin, "if the Northwestern Railway company equipped one of its crack engines with proper wheels and started it off down the public highway at forty to fifty miles an hour. Yet the commission believes that many of the 150,000 cars registered in Iowa are operated in a way that makes them far more undesirable than such locomotives would be. * * * The occasions when speed more than twenty-five to thirty miles an hour can be justified or excused are so few as to be absolutely negligible. People's time is not so extremely valuable that the few minutes gained by excessive speed will ever justify their making themselves a menace to other users of the highway."

The commission notes that many manufacturers advertise that racing types of motors are to be found in the stock car models. Experience everewhere has been that, at some time or another, the owner of an automobile will endeavor to get all the speed possible, and if everything goes well the performance sometimes becomes a practice. Another danger is that incompetent persons are permitted to drive private cars. The commission advocates state control of power of cars operated in Iowa. That is, all licensed in the state would have to be of the horse-power sufficient to drive at a speed of only twenty-five or thirty-five miles an hour. The proposal is unpopular, both with the manufacturers and the car owners.

AIN'T NATURE WONDERFUL?

Unnatural History, by Eugene Ahern.

AUTO TOURING.

People go touring in pedestrian-chasers just so they can come rolling back in the old home town and startle the natives with other banners of other cities hanging all over the gas eater like a clothes line at 9 o'clock Monday morning.

This is music to the auto-tourer's ears:

"Why, Henry, jes' look where they've been, Goofville, Omelette-on the tie, Oniondale, Bugburg, an' 'all over.'"

And, of course, a Pike's Peak banner, no auto-touring party is complete without a Pike's Peak banner dangling in the zephyrs even if they only did go as far west as Hammond, Ind.

Auto touring is just one toll after another. And it's some graft, too. All a guy has to do is take a switch and when he hears a chugger come rattling along the highway shove the switch out and yell "toll."

Then he goes up and collects at least a twin jitney.

It's easy money, Eddie, even easier than the way it's extracted in auto-repair shops.

WIGWAGS WELCOME TO ARRIVING VETERANS

Kansas City Cordial in Its Greeting to Grand Army Men.

Kansas City, Mo., Aug. 26.—First moves of a formal nature in connection with the fiftieth annual encampment of the G. A. R., which opens here next week, were made today with the opening of the national headquarters and several information booths. Headquarters of the many auxiliaries of the G. A. R. also have been opened, and by Monday morning the units of the blue-clad army will all have been marshaled and ready at the command of the commander-in-chief, Elias Monfort.

Wednesday, the day of the veterans' parade, has been declared a holiday in both Kansas City, Mo., and Kansas City, Kas., Mayor Green, of the latter city, yesterday issuing a proclamation to that effect. Both cities are decorated with flags and bunting.

Incoming veterans today will be welcomed in wigwag from the top of a high building by James H. Whittlesey, of St. Louis, chief signal officer of the commander-in-chief and commander of the survivors of the ram fleet. Four white doves will be liberated at the same time bearing ribbons upon which will be printed a welcome and a wish for a speedy accomplishment of universal peace.

Convention hall, the place for the formal meetings of the veterans, has been divided into booths in which scattered members of regiments may reunite. One of the booths has been turned over to the pension bureau at Washington, at request of E. C. Tieman, acting commissioner, and in it questions pertaining to pensions will be answered.

A thousand boy scouts will act as guides and aides to the veterans while they are here. Under the direction of Dr. James H. Sowerby, chief scout executive, they have been trained to serve the soldiers in every way. Special training in first-aid work has been given the youngsters.

"Whenever you speak to a veteran call him 'comrade,'" said Doctor Sowerby in his final instructions. "They are keen for helping the old men," Doctor Sowerby said, "and I can imagine the stories the veterans will tell them. It will be good training for the boys and should be of great service to the men of the Grand Army."

CROWD IS SHOWERED WITH BLAZING OIL

Bursting of Big Oil Tank at Charles City, Ia., is Disastrous.

Charles City, Iowa, Aug. 26.—Two men and one woman are near death from burns; nine others, including a boy and two women, were seriously burned, and a number of others were less seriously injured yesterday when a large oil tank belonging to the Standard Oil company exploded.

A great pillar of fire shot into the air for a hundred feet, following the explosion, and burning oil was scattered in all directions.

A spark from an engine which was pumping gasoline into storage tanks of the plant caused the explosion, and the fire which followed it spread rapidly, destroying the new plant and causing a loss estimated by the officials of the company at $25,000.

Panic in Neighborhood.

Pedestrians in the vicinity of the plant were the sufferers from the burning oil for the most part, and a panic was caused in the neighborhood, the residents fleeing to get away from the plant.

The hospital here soon crowded with those who had been burned by the blazing oil.

Among the more seriously injured are Rev. Mr. Proebe, Mrs. Conradt, Mrs. Sherman Hunt, Mr. Levitch, A. Gardner, H. C. Clifford, Paul Marshall, a 12-year-old boy; George Kellogg and Paul Reetz. At the hospital last night it was said the extent of the injuries to several of the more seriously burned could not be determined for several hours.

Many Wear Bandages.

Score of residents of the town were wearing bandages last night, to cover burns and scorches. When the fire first started the run of the fire department to the blaze attracted the townspeople.

As the fire spread there were a number of minor explosions, and by the time the great explosion which sent up a pillar of fire and scattered oil broadcast took place a crowd had surrounded the plant.

This accounts for the large number of persons burned. The police had all they could attend to in keeping the townspeople from gathering close to the fire.

VICTIMS OF POISONED CANDY WILL RECOVER

Attending Physicians Believe Sweets Bought Here Contained Arsenic.

An analysis of the candy believed to have contained arsenic causing the serious illness of three daughters of H. E. Weaver, a farmer residing seven miles north of Pierceton, will be made by the Fort Wayne board of health. The candy will probably be sent to the state food and drug department at Indianapolis.

The three girls will recover. Soon after eating the candy they were taken violently ill and lapsed into unconsciousness. Dr. C. E. Leedy, of Pierceton, was summoned and found the condition of the girls so alarming that he called in Dr. Charles Ireland, a specialist of Columbus, who has been visiting at Chapman Lake. They both attributed the girls' condition to arsenic poisoning.

The children are: Wilma, 2; Irene, 5, and Isobelle, 6. Irene seemed to be the worse, but late Friday night took a change for the better and was very much improved Saturday morning. Little Wilma's condition Saturday morning was more alarming.

Mr. and Mrs. Weaver came to Fort Wayne to spend the day with Elmer Weaver, who is a patient at the Lutheran hospital. While waiting for the train at the Pennsylvania station to take them home they purchased some candy to take to the children. The candy was in little telephones and was of various colors. The parents thought this would please the children. Soon after eating it, however, the children were taken violently ill and for a time it was though death was inevitable.

WILL AID THE SOLDIER AFTER HE QUITS ARMY

Washington, D. C., Aug. 26.—A policy of caring for federal soldiers upon retirement to civil life patterned after that of the British government, which secures employment for enlisted men retiring from the army, has just been inaugurated by the United States. It is announced in a pamphlet issued today by Adjutant General McCairn, explaining how the soldier may take advantage of lucrative offers provided he has demonstrated his efficiency for civil employment during enlistment.

Recruiting officers are named in twenty-three states through whom applications may be made for employment. The pamphlet emphasizes the fact that the army offers exceptional advantages to those who desire to fit themselves for almost any line of vocational work. It also contains a long list of positions scattered throughout the United States in the filling of which former soldiers will be given preference. Many of these are state or municipal employments at salaries ranging up to $1,800 a year. The list shows the city, the position and the necessary qualifications as reported by recruiting officers who gathered the data. The purpose of the pamphlet is threefold: To attract the best class of recruits to disabuse the public mind of the impression that the army is a refuge for those unfitted for other employment and to explain to the soldiers how they may take full advantage of the vocational training in the army provided for in the reorganization bill recently enacted.

DESIGNING HUGE FIELD HOWITZERS

Army Ordnance Experts at Work on Guns Larger Than Germans'.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 26.—Army ordnance experts are at work on designs for huge field howitzers as large, or larger, than the German 42-centimetre guns which wrecked Belgian and French forts early in the war. They will be at least 16-inch calibre, with a range of twelve to fifteen miles, hurling a projectile weighing more than a ton and carrying a huge amount of high explosive.

In addition to placing several of these mammoth weapons along the coast line for mobile defense against naval attack army officials now are considering the creation of a special regiment, equipped with six of the howitzers, to work as a unit of the mobile army. It is planned to build the new howitzers primarily for transportation by rail on special cars.

To Have Taste of Grand Opera.

On October 12, Fort Wayne is to have one night of real grand opera. That is a surprising statement because while the city has had much in the way of parts of the grand opera scores produced here, aside from "Madame Butterfly" and "Cavaleria Rusticana," and the productions of the Aborn Opera company, music lovers here have either contented themselves with going to larger cities to attend performances or hearing only snatches of them at home. E. A. Bachelder, representing the Boston National Grand Opera company, has been in Fort Wayne and received an encouragement that surprised him. As an outcome with Mr. Bachelder's conferences with prominent business men and non-professional singers, who are also business men, it has been arranged for the company to appear at the New Palace on the date named. It is not fully decided what will be given here but "Faust" seems to be the most favored opera. The fact that it is to be produced at the New Palace insures room and reasonably priced seats. The opera company will stop off here on the way to Indianapolis, where a number of operas are to be given. The performance here will have everything necessary, a large orchestra, chorus, scenery and metropolitan soloists of the first class.

AT THE MAJESTIC

"UNCLE TOM'S CABIN" TONIGHT

The Wm. H. Kibble's Revival Will Appear at the Majestic again tonight.

It is an undisputed fact that there is no better production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin' 'on the road today than that made by Kibble and Martin several years ago and improved with each season since. It is the largest company with possibly a few exceptions, such as special revivals, ever used in the production of the play, it is claimed, for it contains a company of the original "Georgia shouters" who play the negroes in the cotton fields, and who are seen in plantation dances and heard in plantation songs in scenes showing the quarters of the negroes on a plantation where the master was a humane man. There are solos, quartets, and choruses in which the old-time songs as well as the new ones are sung by voices having the peculiar negro sweetness. There are a number of excellent dancers and they dance among others the latest shuffle, called the "S'wance Shine." There is a pack of genuine bloodhounds, gaunt and ugly looking beasts, such as were used to track escaped criminals in the south. These bloodhounds, brought from the south, are a part of the pack used by a prison contractor at his convict pen in Georgia, and are used in the scenes where the escaped slaves are followed, and with their deep-mouth baying and impressiveness to the escape of Eliza and of George Harris. There are also horses, donkeys and ponies and altogether the live stock exhibit is extensive. The scenery is a special feature of the production. Some of the most notable scenes include the humble cabin of Uncle Tom, and an old southern road, Skinner's tavern, the ice-gorged Ohio river by moonlight, the home of Phineas Friend, the wild rocky pass in southern Ohio, and the transformation, called "The Holy City."

NEW BILL COMING.

Last Time Tonight for Current Program at the New Palace.

The feature bill which has established itself as a prime favorite at the New Palace since Thursday closes with this evening's performance to make way for an entirely new array. On the current program are the Norine Carmen minstrels in fifteen minutes of an old-time minstrel first part—burnt cork, gags, tam, bones and all but with a statuesque blonde for interlocutor: Frances Dyer, the charming young soprano whom Fort Wayne would like even if she were not a native daughter: James H. Cullen, the man from the west, in his medley of songs and nonsense; Lawrence Crane, the Irish wizard, doing a grist of baffling tricks and illusions; Fox and Ingraham, a surprisingly clever team of songsters, and the Three Alexander Girls in a dancing novelty de luxe.

JIM CULLEN,

A group of four Chinese comedians and vocalists known as the Ching Wha Four will be the headline attraction on the bill for the first four days of the coming week. These chinks have been here before, scoring a hit with Fort Wayne audiences. The Three Bennett Sisters will give a physical culture demonstration, in which these divinely formed women demonstrate the value of proper exercise in building up the human body. Harry Brooks, assisted by Katherine Clinton and company will appear in a dramatic bit entitled "The Old Minstrel Man." Sandy Shaw, the peer of Scotch comedians; White, Mullalley and White, the singing acrobatic dancing trio, and the Dares in their novel athletic comedy are other features of the new bill.

AT THE TEMPLE.

"SINNERS," OPENING BILL.

Whoever respects the dignity of the stage or is desirous that the drama maintain its high place among the fine arts, must rejoice in the success of Owen Davis' new comedy-drama, "Sinners," which begins a week's engagement at the Temple theatre soon. This is the play that had its premiere at the prison chapel at Sing Sing last Christmas day, going thence to the Playhouse, New York, where it remained until the middle of the following July.

Mr. Louis Wolford provides his special stock company for the local engagement, and those who care for the best the modern stage has to offer will make no mistake in going to the Temple next week, if only for the purpose of seeing this admirable aggregation of players. The company includes Maurice Jenkins, Jack Doty, Annie Burt, Lillian Haig, Sarah Kyles, Claire Maslen, Owen Coll, Walter Turner, Dave Callis, L. Wolford, Walter Turner, Charles Franklyn.

Entire Body Covered With Watery Pimples

Would Scratch Till Blood Came.

Providence, R. I., Oct. 15, 1915.—"Some time ago my skin began to break out in little pimples. These filled with water and when they opened the watery fluid ran out and spread the trouble until my entire body from my face to my feet was covered. The itching was something terrible, and I would scratch until the blood came, and my skin would feel as if it were burning. I tried a prescription and several kinds of salve, but none helped me. After I had suffered this way for about 14 or 15 months I tried Resinol Ointment and Resinol Soap, and the first application relieved me so that I slept that night. In six weeks I was cured." (Signed) Raymond E. Madley, 690 Union Ave.

Doctors have prescribed the Resinol treatment for over twenty years. Sold by all druggists. Samples free—write to Dept. 3-S, Resinol, Baltimore, Md.—Advertisement.

BRIDGES OPPOSED TO RELEASE OF STUDENTS

Not Best for Morale and Discipline of Troops, His Belief.

Indianapolis, Aug. 26.—Adjt. Gen. Frank L. Bridges does not believe that the discharge of the college and university students among the Indiana troops at the border is the best for the morals and discipline of the troops. He has been expressing his opinions of the reported proposal of the war department to discharge the students before Sept. 1 so they may return to school.

Speaking of the proposed discharge of such guardsmen Adjutant General Bridges said:

"If any man in the United States between the ages of 18 and 45 years can afford to give his time to his country, it is the students who are going to college. They can best afford to sacrifice because in nine cases out of ten they are going to school at the expense of their families, or have enough money saved to pay their own expenses. Few, if any, of them have any dependents, and probably all of their education up to the present time has been obtained at the expense of state and federal government. The student is the type of man needed as a volunteer because he gives the best account of himself by reason of his ability and schooling. He can better afford to 'waste' a year or two than the man with a family, a profession or a business."

General Bridges says he does not believe a class of students should be established and the college men discharged because of the antagonism it will cause on the part of the men retained, many of whom can ill afford the sacrifice. As yet, he says, he has received no word of how the students among the Indiana troops will be discharged, whether on their own application or automatically.

According to the adjutant general, his department now is receiving few applications for the release of guardsmen with dependents. When the first mobilization orders were received his office was besieged with women, old and young, and children, seeking some way to keep their men at home. Brides came in and explained "we were just married," and "he simply can't go." "He" went, as there was no provision which allowed the state authorities to discharge "him."

Other women came carrying babes, some a few weeks old only, and explained that "husband and father" was the sole support. Nothing could be done for them. Mothers appeared, fearing in the first days that actually fighting would occur immediately, and begged hysterically that their sons be sent back home. In addition to the personal visits hundreds of letters were received.

Thirty-five guardsmen entitled to discharge under the rule allowing such action if they have persons dependent upon them have arrived at Fort Benjamin Harrison, and others probably will follow soon. Nearly all the relatives of such men, and the men themselves, now understand the way of obtaining the discharge and few applications for assistance are made of the adjutant general's office.

General Bridges says that the hardship is apparent in the cases of young men who earned from $85 to $150 a month before the order to mobilize came. Many of them were buying their homes on contract, and when they suddenly were ordered to report, and their pay was reduced to $15 a month, their positions became difficult.

On the question of pay for the Indiana guardsmen, as yet no definite pay day has been established. Some have received their pay regularly and others have not. General Bridges says that is the fault of the commanding officers who make up the payrolls. The payrolls had not been completed before the troops left the mobilization camp, and now many of them are received in such condition they cannot be honored until returned to Llano Grande and corrected. That caused long delays.

The cost of the mobilization to the state was comparatively small, General Bridges says, because the federal government paid most of it. Only a few companies were held for a few days at the expense of the state, and the expenses for them will be less than $10,000, General Bridges says.

ALL MEN MUST REPORT BY SUNDAY AFTERNOON

Battery D Will Leave as Soon as Arrangements Are Completed.

Upon receipt of the orders to mobilize, Captain John Scheffer, commanding officer of battery D, announces that every member must report at the company headquarters by Sunday noon. This is an official order and disobedience will be punished by court martial.

The local organization will leave for Fort Benjamin Harrison as soon as all arrangements have been made locally, as well as at the adjutant general's office in Indianapolis. It is believed the boys will leave either Monday or Tuesday.

Niel McKay has donated the use of the large hall at West Main street and Webster street, for use of the battery during the mobilization period. This hall will be used by the men who reside out of town as a sleeping place. The men who reside in the city will be given permission to go home each evening while the battery remains in Fort Wayne.

At noon Saturday nearly one hundred privates and five officers had reported for duty at the headquarters of the organization.

Arrangements have been made with Harry Wiebke, proprietor of the Hof Brau, to have the members of the battery to take their meals at that place. The entire second floor has been rented by Captain Scheffer, who announces that the meals will be served at 7:45 a. m., 12:30 p. m. and 5:45 p. m. These hours will remain the same until further orders.

Quartermaster General Davis of the Indiana national guard, called Captain Scheffer by telephone Friday evening to arrange for the transportation of the men to Fort Benjamin Harrison. It is presumed that a special train or trolley will take them to the state's mobilization grounds.

Since it is anticipated that the local battery will replace the Purdue battery at Llano Grande, Texas, the company will remain only a few days at the state rendezvous and will then be hastened to the border. At Indianapolis the men will be furnished with uniforms and personal equipment.

A regular program for the day's work has been announced by Captain Scheffer and is as follows: Breakfast, 7:45 a. m.; drill call, 8:45 a. m.; recall, 10 a. m.; dinner, 12:30 p. m.; drill call, 1:45 p m.; recall, 3 p. m.; non-commissioned officers' school, 3:30 p. m.; supper, 5:45 p. m.; drill call, 8 p. m.; recall, 9:00 p. m.

BRAINS AND COMMON SENSE MAKE PERFECT CHORUS GIRL, SAYS ZIEGFELD.

Florenz Ziegfeld, whose business is to pick beautiful women for his shows, says Hazel Lewis, who has been with the Follies for five years, is The perfect chorus girl.

Miss Lewis has never whiffed a cigarette nor sipped a cocktail, he says. She has brains and common sense and is not afraid to use both.

Says Ziegfeld, who has employed more girls in the chorus than any other man: "The cocktail-drinking, cigarette-smoking chorus girl makes no hit with me. I pay Miss Lewis more than any other chorus girl in my companies. I wish I could find more like her."

RUSS SACRIFICE OWN MEN BY OWN GUNFIRE

Vienna Says Tactics Have No Precedent in Wars of the World.

Vienna, July 30 (correspondence of the Associated Press).—The Russian offensive against the Austro-Hungarian troops is being conducted, according to Austrian officers returned from the front, with tactics that hardly have a precedent in the history of the wars of the world.

These tactics are, briefly, to annihilate the Austrians by forcing Russian soldiers to advance in their own artillery fire, drawing the Austrians from their bomb-and-sheel-proof shelters into hand-to-hand combat, and then mowing down both Austrians and Russians by a withering drumfire. Great Russian losses, it is claimed, are due to this method of warfare.

The Russian method of attack in the Bukowina and Volhynia, the Austrians say, consists of artillery preparation lasting from twenty-four to forty-eight hours. Then come the first Russian infantry troops, in from six to fourteen rows, driven forward by Russian machine guns and by Cossacks armed with the dreaded 'nagaikas," or lead-tipped whips.

As they advance the Russian artillery fire abates somewhat, but between it and the Austrian fire from 40 to 50 per cent of the first troops sometimes reach the trenches. Their arrival naturally forces the Austrians to abandon their shelters, and as soon as they do so the Russian drumfire begins again.

In both the Bukowina and the Volhynia offensives it is estimated that the Russians use up about two million shells every twenty-four hours—shells of Russian, Japanese and American make, and thrown from every caliber of gun, including naval pieces apparently dismounted from warships.

Lonesomest Man Toils in Dark Room and the Person Who Sees Most People Sells Tickets

HERE IS THE LONESOMEST MAN AND LEAST LONELY GIRL IN FORT WAYNE.

CHALRES E. EVARTS.

MRS. MAMIE DALTON.

Who is the lonesomest man in town? On the other hand who sees the most people because their business puts them face to face with the city?

This question has been asked over and over and a Sentinel reporter wondered about it.

He started out to locate the person who was just naturally thrown up against the people of the city and being paid for it. He wondered what would be the impressions mankind and womankind made on the person they passed.

It was late afternoon and the reporter dropped into the stream of humanity, which never rests in its movement up and down the principal streets of Fort Wayne, from dawn until long after darkness. The hurrying feet and dragging feet caused riffles and eddies in the stream. The current passed store after store, it was blocked here for a minute, it paused to look at the next window, but never lost its motion.

"We just have time to take in a movie," somebody said.

There was the big idea for Steven, the reporter. In the course of a day nearly everybody has time to take in a movie. The ticket taker at the movie house must see most people. Steven hurried around the corner.

Thousands Seen Daily.

"How many folks do you see in a day?" he asked of Mrs. Mamie Dalton, 125½ East Douglas avenue, who sells tickets at the Jefferson theatre.

"Thousands," Mrs. Dalton said quietly.

"How many do you notice?"

"Thousands."

"Do you pay attention to everybody who comes past the window?"

"Just about."

Mrs. Dalton at the task of receiving nickels and dimes from 1 o'clock in the afternoon until 10 o'clock at night, with time out for supper. She has been on the job for more than two years. She estimates that she has looked into 5,000,000,000 faces during that time. Many of them are the same faces seen over and over whose owners never miss a good movie, three times a week.

Mrs. Dalton sees more women than men. Seven-tenths of the customers of the movie house are women and girls. Not half of the women who attend the movies regularly chew gum. Mrs. Dalton does not chew gum.

Men who are movie fans are generally married men. They are the best kind of married men. They take their wives with them to the show. Mrs. Dalton never heard of a married man who was a movie fan and who beat his wife.

Mrs. Dalton tries to read the character of people who approach the window of the movie house. Sometimes she has natural prejudices to overcome she admits. In her estimation the young man who always flips a cigarette into the street before he swings up to the window is handicapped. She has a grudge against the fellow who always presents a $5 bill.

"Yes, I notice women's clothes. I scrutinize a woman from her feet up. I always start the inspection at their feet."

Can't Pick Out the Goat.

"When several women come up in a group I can always tell who is going to pay. I can tell by the way some of them hang back. They all run a bluff generally. Some of them do not have change. Some leave their money at home. I can nearly always pick out the one who will be the goat before they reach the window.

"No, men do not act that way. Men are more liberal. Men generally all want to pay and have the money ready. Men are easier to deal with.

"I read faces by eyes generally. I have no way of finding out afterwards, but I most always form an opinion of people who pass and I think my opinions are generally right."

The Lonesomest Person.

But what about the lonesomest person? What would be the views of life of the person who civilization had set apart by the nature of his calling?

Who would the man be who sees fewest people in the course of a day? It couldn't be the grocer or the ice man or the laborer in any line, for these men all jostle with their fellows many times in the course of their working hours.

In a photograph gallery the strenuous Steven marched. Of the clerk he asked: "Show me the man who does not see anybody."

"I can't, he is busy."

"Who do you mean?" wondered Steven.

"I thought you referred to the man in the dark room."

"I will be back," said Steven, and hurried away to sharpen his lead pencil.

On his return Steven stumbled down the stairs into the black vault where Charles E. Evarts, 719 Columbia street, works at developing pictures for the Parrot art studio.

Touch of Mystery.

There was a touch of mystery in the many colored shadows. There was the outline of big jars, the gurgle of running water, the click of shears. There were boxes and stools, but Evarts later said that he never sat down during working hours.

The man in the big black apron approached the blinking reporter.

"How many folks do you see as you work each day?" Steven asked the mild little man when his eyes became accustomed to the streaky rays of vivid white light which pierced the inky darkness from the developing box.

"Not any generally. Some days I never see daylight."

"Do you get lonesome?"

"No. You see I keep studying new faces all the time. I have looked at the pictured face of most of the people in Fort Wayne in the thirty-three years I have followed this business."

"Can you read character in the face?"

"I imagine I can. I try to make out what a man is by the squint of his eye. Because I do not see people often is no sign I do not know men. I have never bought any gold bricks or fence stock."

"When you see a picture do you know the person afterwards?"

"I know that I have seen the face before and that is all. I can't know the name. That is what troubles me when I am out on the street. Most of the people I look at I wonder, 'Where did I see you before?' I can't quite place them. The half forgotten memory of their pictured face haunts me like a troublesome ghost."

"What do you do when you are away from here?"

"I am a lodge man. I attend two lodges. I like fellowship and brotherhood of men even if I do live as a recluse while I make out an average of 500 pictures a day."

Other clerks and workmen at the Parrot studio call Evarts "the human clock." He counts all the time as he works. He can write and count at the same time. He counts in his head the number of seconds needed to print a picture. He counts the time for developing. He can count to three minutes and not be a second off. He can keep track of three counts at once. He never uses a clock to do his timing like many other men who do developing work.

THIS BOY HAD NO CHANCE

The parents of a small boy were greatly disturbed by a teacher's report that their son was the laziest boy in school.

"He is so lazy," the teacher declared, "that whenever he has to read, he becomes sleepy in a very few minutes."

Scoldings and whippings proving of no avail, the boy was taken to the family physician. The latter passed him on to an optometrist, who found him much in need of glasses. As soon as he began to wear these he kept up easily with his class.

This boy's case is like the cases of many other children, and of many adults also. They have no obvious symptoms of eyestrain, but they find it hard to concentrate their attention. Their heads tire quickly when they try to think. They are nervous and irritable. All this impairs their efficiency, sending their earning power far below what it ought to be. They become difficult persons to get along with at home and in their business dealings. When, as sometimes happens, their unsuspected eyestrain makes them so overwrought that they cannot sleep, their plight is miserable indeed.

If, then, you suspect that your eyesight is not what it ought to be; if, no matter how good it seems, you suffer from the physical and mental troubles mentioned above, play safe by consulting C. A. Meigs, 1012 Calhoun.—Advertisement.

KNITTERS HONOR THEO. F. THIEME

Give President of Wayne Mills Reception on Anniversary of Company.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Wayne Knitting mills was celebrated in a most fitting manner last night, when the members of the Knitters' union gathered at the Wayne Knit club house and held a reception in honor of Thodore F. Thieme, president of the company. The celebration came rather as a surprise to the head of the great concern, who was unaware that a jubilee of such great proportions had been planned.

During the course of the evening Mr. Thieme was presented with a handsome silver loving cup, sixteen inches high, bearing an inscription from the donors and also a likeness of the recipient and the Wayne Knitting mills engraved upon it. The gift was a remarkable tribute to the esteem in which Mr. Thieme is held by the employes of the mills and was typical of the spirit of co-operation and loyalty which prevails between employes and employed. Besides this gift to Mr. Thieme the veteran knitters, who were present as honored guests, were each presented with a box of cigars. The seven veterans so honored were Carl Clausner, Herman Miller, Wilhelm Rosseler, Richard Lohse, Louis Ludwig, Ernst Jahn and Earnest Minkel.

The jubilee celebration was held in a hall which was magnificently decorated with American flags and colored lights. The program which had been arranged for the celebration was a most enjoyable one, and was brought to a close by a sumptuous banquet. The chief address of the evening was delivered by Mr. Chas. Butler, past president of the Knitters' union, who outlined in a very masterly way the growth and expansion of the industry since its establishment twenty-five years ago. He referred to the friendly relations always existing between the management and the employes and declared this to be the chief reason for the wonderful growth of the institution. He closed his address with a fine tribute to Theodore F. Thieme, and told of the great personal interest the president of the mills had always felt for the employes.

Following the address of Mr. Butler, Emil Weisbach, a member of the committee on arrangements, recited in German "The Theme of the Stocking," and was greeted with warm applause, especially from the hundreds of Germans who were present. The speech of presentation of the loving cup to Mr. Thieme was made by Arno Reuther, president of the Knitters' union. The Saxonia Singing society rendered several selections and Fred Fowler sang the "Song of the Stocking." While this song was being sung, Wayne Knit stockings bearing the words of the chorus were distributed, and the whole gathering joined in singing the refrain. Emil Weisbach, assisted by Cartoonist Chas. Firks, entertained the company with an illustrated recitation, which was highly enjoyed by all.

Near the close of the celebration Mr. Thieme delivered a short personal talk in which he expressed his thanks and appreciation for the honor which had been conferred upon him. He declared that the wonderful expansion and prosperity of the industry had been made possible by the mutual good fellowship existing between the management and the workers and praised the loyalty of the Knitters' union.

WILL TRAVEL LIKE KINGS.

Special Train Will Take Nickel Plate Vets to Convention.

The schedule of the special train which will carry the members of the Nickel Plate Employes' Veteran association to Buffalo next Saturday to attend the banquet and convention was bulletined at the depot, roundhouse, shops and elsewhere this morning. When the train leaves Fort Wayne at 8:15 Friday evening, as the second section of No. 4, it will have two high-back seat vestibule coaches and two Pullman sleeping cars. Two more sleeping cars will be added at Bellevue and at Cleveland the train will pick up another sleeping car and a dining car, making a total of five Pullman cars, two coaches and a dining car. It will arrive in Buffalo at 8 o'clock, breakfast being served in the dining car en route to all who care to avail themselves of the opportunity at thirty-five cents each. At Buffalo the train will be delivered to the New York Central and taken to Niagara Falls, where the veterans will be given opportunity to spend two or three hours at that famous resort. It will return to Buffalo at noon, a short time before the business of the convention commences. Returning the train will leave Buffalo at 10:30 o'clock in the evening and arrive in Fort Wayne just ahead of westbound passenger train No. 1, about 11:15 o'clock Sunday morning. One of the sleeping cars will be cut out at Cleveland, but the balance of the train will continue to Fort Wayne. The applications for sleeping car and other accommodations on the train are pouring in rapidly, indicating a great interest in the convention and the largest crowd that ever attended the meetings. The business session of the convention will commence at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon, September 2, one of the first acts being the election of the officers, and the banquet will commence at 6:30 o'clock.

TO ELIMINATE FLAWS.

New York Central Has New Process for Preventing Rail Breaks.

The New York Central railway has announced an important discovery in the perfection of a process for the elimination of hidden flaws in steel rails, one of the principal causes these modern [illegible] of heavy cars and still heavier engines, of train wreck. It was declared by the officials of the New York Central that this new process has reduced rail breaks on its own lines of from one break in 600 rails to one break in 142,000. The process was developed in the railway shops by the New York Central's staff of specialists under the direction of P. H. Dudley. Flaws or interior fissures, as they are called, are taken from the rail, in reheating plants attached to the railrolling mills. The process is claimed to be a positive remedy. Accidents caused by broken rails during the year 1915 numbered 3,345 and killed 205 persons, injured 7,341, and caused property losses of over $4,000,000.

BUSINESS ON NICKEL PLATE.

(Bellevue Gazette.)

The unprecedented business rush on the Nickel Plate continues with no signs of any let-up in the future. During the past few weeks twenty-seven firemen have been hired and placed in service on the Fort Wayne division of the road and the end is not in sight, firemen being hired daily. During the summer season the usual procedure is to lay off a number of men, but during the present summer only two have been "set [illegible] and these were recalled within a month's time. THE QUARTER CENTURY CLUB, ITS PRESIDENT AND SECRETARY AND FOUR OLD MEMBERS.

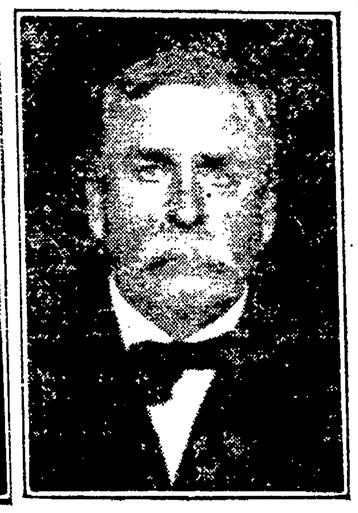
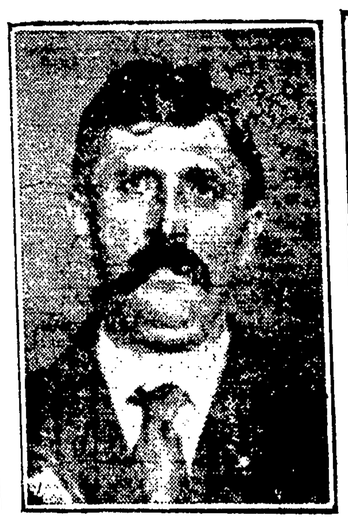
E. A. BARNES (PRESIDENT).

M. S. WILLSON (SECRETARY).



JOHN F. KEISS.

C. S. REHRER.



H. R. REHM.

WILLIAM H. SCHULTZ.

There are now thirty-seven officials and employes at the local General Electric works whose combined service with the company or its predecessor is 1,036 years. These men are the members of the Quarter Century club, and the average period of their connection with the works is twenty-eight years.

The club was organized Jan. 28, 1916, at a banquet at the Hotel Anthony at which the chief speaker was A. L. Rohrer, of Schenectady, N. Y., a member of the Quarter Century club of that city, who explained the objects of the club and told of the social benefits which would arise from an organization of one in Fort Wayne.

Twenty-nine names were enrolled at that meeting and nine have been added since. One of the charter members—William Rehling—is deceased, leaving the membership today just thirty-seven. Eligibility to membership is a continuous service of twenty-five years with the company.

The membership and the date of beginning service with the works is as follows: J. J. Wood, January, 1877; William Driftmeyer, August, 1883; John F. Keiss, November, 1884; William Rehling, May, 1884; William H. Schultz, July, 1885; C. S. Reher, October, 1885; H. R. Rehm, August, 1885; M. S. Willson, October, 1885; H. C. Beers, August, 1887; Fred F. Miller, July, 1887; William Raidy, September, 1887; George Wood, March, 1887; F. S. Hunting, October, 1888; Stuart Rehrer, February, 1888; William Donnel, May, 1888; William Murphy, September, 1888; Fred Kiefharber, November, 1888; E. A. Barnes, April, 1889; Harry Evans, November, 1889; William Wurtle, June, 1889; William Brennen, September, 1889; D. S. Meyers, June, 1889; Tony Miller, September, 1889; William P. Kindt, March, 1889; Alex Schlatter, September, 1889; Samuel Brownsberger, July, 1889; S. W. Richards, July, 1889; John N. Kress, November, 1889; John E. Hall, December, 1889; A. L. Hadley, November, 1890; W. G. Beaman, November, 1890; Fred Hilgeman, November, 1890; William Haag, February, 1891; Eugene McLaughlin, October, 1891; August Kayser, May, 1891; William Crighton, May, 1891; Clark Orr, October, 1891, and E. A. Wagner, October, 1891.

There are many men who will be eligible to membership within the next year or two, and it is predicted that the club will have nearly 100 members two or three years hence. John F. Keiss, M. S. Willson, William H. Schultz, C. S. Rehrer and H. R. Rehm bear the distinction of having been with the local plant from the beginning, when it was owned and controlled by Mr. Jenney. They worked through his administration and that of R. T. McDonald, and are likely to serve the present administration a number of years. Their portraits, as well as that of Factory Supt. E. A. Barnes, the first president of the club, are presented above. M. S. Willson is secretary of the club.

Preliminary plans for a celebration are now on and will soon be developed. Instead of a banquet at a hotel, it has been suggested by one of the leading members that the club hold a picnic in some grove easily reached by automobiles and the proposition seems to meet with favor. If a picnic is held it will take place in a week or two, before the weather gets cold.

DRINKS INK WHEN SHE FAILS TO KIDNAP BABE

Child-Wife Wanted Infant in Hope Husband Would Return to Her.

Chicago, Ill., Aug. 26.—A 17-year-old Evanston bride attempted suicide yesterday after a frustrated attempt to kidnap a neighbor's child in an effort to win back her husband, who left her for an actress.

The woman, Mrs. Lucille Ross, 1426 Sherman avenue, swallowed the contents of an ink bottle, half of a bottle of fact lotion and part of the contents of a medicine bottle, and was in a critical condition last night.

Married before she was 17 years old, the girl was deserted a few months later, it is said, when her husband became enamored of an actress. The bride has been heartbroken since. She told relatives and friends that if she had a baby she felt sure her husband would return to her.

Her mother, Mrs. Jessie Gillen, and two little daughters, Marion and Gladys, had been visiting her. They departed Thursday. While there the children had played with Ernestina Broucek, 4 years old, 1456 Sherman avenue.

Loneliness against engulfed the young wife. Desperate, she took the little Broucek girl down town.

Yesterday morning she and the child returned to Evanston after, it was learned, a matron at the Union station had found her and the little girl there.

Back in her home, Mrs. Ross wrote a note and then swallowed such liquids as she thought would bring death. The note read:

"Nobody put me up to this. I did it myself."

In Evanston it is sid that Mrs. Roth does not know the whereabouts of her husband.

The plaintiff was recently divorced from her husband, who was given custody of the children. Snarr remarried and the children have been in care of his second wife. Mrs. Snarr No. 1 was privileged to visit the children at stated intervals, according to court order, but the defendant asserted she was not in fit condition to see the children when she called.

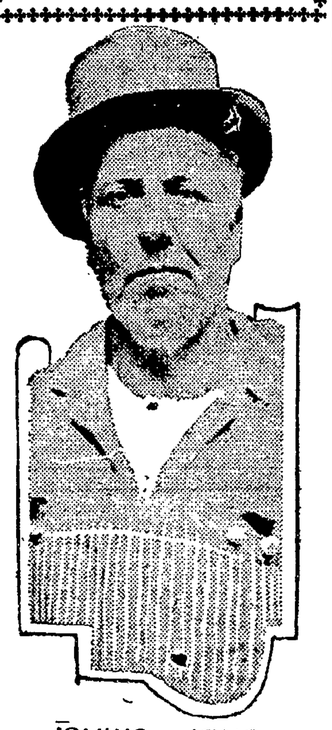
Man May Be Saved from Execution



IRVING KING

Charles F. Stielow, farm hand, said by police authorities to have "the mentality of a child of seven," will not be executed for the murder of Charles Phelps and his housekeeper, Miss Margaret Wolcott, of West Shelby, N. Y., if the confession of Irving King, who says he is the real murderer, is confirmed.

King, a horse trader and peddler, has twice confessed guilt of the crimes, the police say, implicating his friend, Clarence O'Connell, now in Auburn prison.

The date of the execution of Stielow has been set four different times, and each time execution has been postponed. His nephew, Nelson Green, now undergoing a 20-year sentence at Elmira, because he pleaded guilty of participation in the crime, also will get his liberty if King's confession is confirmed.

CITY HALL NEWS.

Assessed Too Low.

Some property in Fort Wayne is being assessed too low is the belief of Controller Baade. He shows that Evansville has a valuation of $20,000,000 more than Fort Wayne and basing it on the rate of 91.5, the $20,000,000 would bring additional revenue of $180,000. Mr. Baade says if city property was assessed higher—and in his opinion some of it ought to be—the tax levy could be reduced. He cites two ways of getting revenue, one by taxation and the other by valuation. The city controller says the assessed valuation of the city of Fort Wayne should not be less than that of Evansville.

Return From Baltimore.

Fort Wayne was represented at Baltimore by Frank J. Dix, chief electrician of the city light and power works, and Robert J. Gaskill, superintendent of the police and fire alarm systems, at a meeting of the National Association of Municipal Engineers. Mr. Gaskill was elected president of the association and Mr. Dix, speaking at the meeting, told of the growth of the Fort Wayne plant, showing how it has meant a saving of much money in current. Service, Mr. Dix told the Baltimore meeting, was the watchword of an electric lighting plant. Both men were deeply interested in the sessions of the convention and state it was one of the most enthusiastic ever held.

To Deliver Bills.

Beginning Monday the water works department will deliver current water bills which will run delinquent twenty days after date of delivery. Meters will be read every three months, in March, June, September and December. Bills will be rendered quarterly to the consumer using more than the minimum. The rate for water in Fort Wayne is $4 a year and this permits the use of 14½ cubic feet or 109 gallons a day without extra cost.

Building Permits.

Chief Is Notified.

Police Chief Lenz has received a letter from the city board of health informing him of the order that children under 16 years must be kept away from public gatherings. The chief is asked to pass the order to his men and see that it is obeyed. The letter shows that a violation of the order is a violation of law, subjecting the violator to a penalty.

ADJOURNMENT PLAN IS GIVEN NEW JOLT

Senator Owen Renews Effort for Corrupt Practice Measure.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 26.—Senator Owen made another futile effort in the senate today to get consideration of the corrupt practices bill. Senator Smoot, republican, objected, but Senator Borah declared the republican leaders could bind him to no legislative program and said he desired to vote on both the corrupt practices and immigration bills before adjournment.

Senators Reed and Saulsbury, democrats, declared they would aid Senator Owen in an effort to get the corrupt practices bill before the senate and that precipitated a flutter over the democratic program for adjournment next week.

Senator Reed declared the republicans did not want to pass the corrupt practices bill "because the old guard in control of the party and the candidate want a corrupt election." Indications were for a close fight over Senator Owen's motion when he makes it.

When the senate resumed discussion of the revenue bill today Senator Gronna, republican, ridiculed the democratic national convention's declaration for economy, charging that the party had piled up appropriations for the last fiscal year greater than any other in the country's history except during the civil war.

John Sommers, companion of the old man on pleasure jaunts which he already has testified to in court, Barney Bertsche and other witnesses will be called on to testify.

No children are to be permitted to congregate in bunches on the street, vacant lots, market house or any other place outside their own yards. If the children do not heed the warning of the police they will be taken to police headquarters.

The order reads: "All men on the police force are hereby instructed to prevent children under the age of sixteen years to gather either on the street, vacant lots, market house or any other place outside their own yards. The order must be obeyed to the letter and if children are found congregated any place outside their own yard they must be brought to the station."

DANIELS IN SHARP REPLY TO CRITICS

Secretary of Navy Gives Answers to Questions Fired at Him.

Milbridge, Me., Aug. 26. Secretary of the Navy Daniels delivered here last night the first of a series of speeches he will make in this state during the next few days which mark his entry into the campaign for the re-election of President Wilson. While he touched on other topics to some extent, Mr. Daniels devoted himself particularly to answering charges made by Representative A. P. Gardner, of Massachusetts, who has been the secretary's chief critic in congress.

Mr. Daniels referred to a series of thirteen questions regarding the administration of the navy which Mr. Gardner propounds to the secretary in a letter, saying that all of them had been asked by Mr. Gardner and answered satisfactorily by the navy department many times.

Didn't Sing 'Em to Him.

"There are doubtless people who are able to ask more questions than Mr. Gardner," the secretary said, "but I doubt if anyone has ever asked the same questions so many times without paying the slightest attention to the answers. I have done everything but sing them to him, and while goodness knows I am no singer, if I thought that by so doing I could get him to stop asking questions long enough to listen to the answers I would gladly set them to music."

Answering one of Mr. Gardner's questions which alleged that twelve of the twenty-one battleships in the fleet recorded unsatisfactory scores in the 1914 battle practice, the secretary produced a letter from Capt. C. P. Plunkett, director of gunnery exercises, who said of his twenty years' experience in the navy:

"I know no time during that period when the enemies of our country had more to fear from the batteries of our fleet than they have today."

Captain Plunkett added that by direction of the secretary the widest possible publicity would be given to the battle practice results next month.

Undermines Confidence.

"I do not sympathize with this form of criticism," the gunnery director wrote, referring to Mr. Gardner's question, "and believe that it will undermine the confidence of the people in the fleet and the confidence of the fleet people in their ships and in the officers who are charged with the responsibility of the preparation of the fleet for war.

"I consider such criticism and attacks on our target practice and the publication of the facts in connection therewith have been of the greatest use to every enemy of the government, both in our own country and abroad."

"On the floor of congress," Mr. Daniels continued, "Mr. Gardner said he wished he could have the opinion of the official observer on our battle ships as to their target practice. I read him his opinion. These are not my words, not those of any politician nor any civil appointee of a political party. They are uttered with full knowledge of his responsibility by one of the foremost officers of the United States navy and an expert on these subjects."

Answers Torpedo Question.

Another question dealt with the type of torpedoes with which battleships were equipped, Mr. Gardner asserting that those in use in 1914 had been declared obsolete by navy ordnance officials. He asked if the secretary knew this when he issued his 1914 reports.

"We not only knew it, but were already manufacturing long-range torpedoes to take their places." Mr. Daniels, adding that these facts also had been contained in his own report and that of the chief of ordnance to which Mr. Gardner referred.

"I am also glad to inform him," he continued, "that since then all the dreadnoughts in commission have been equipped with these new torpedoes."

The secretary refuted Mr. Gardner's assertions that there had been undue delay in the completion of navy ships of various types now under construction. Labor conditions made it difficult to hasten this work, he said, but the department was doing all in its power in this regard and had plans for the 1917 ships ready before congress had passed the appropriation bill authorizing their construction.

It was composed of supreme representatives from thirty-four states. The resolution for the merger was unanimous. Articles concerning the deal will be filed with the insurance department of the state.

CLERGYMAN JUMPS TO DEATH.

Rev. Ignatius Tomazin Ends Life by Leap From Hotel Window.

Chicago, Ill., Aug. 26.—Rev. Ignatius Tomazin, 70, who resigned his pastorate of a church in Albany, Minn., a month ago, after his parishioners are alleged to have attacked and beaten him, jumped to his death from the sixth floor of a hotel here today.

According to hotel employes the priest has been acting strangely since coming to Chicago.

EVERYTHING READY FOR COLORED TEAM

Clearyites Are Anxious to Take a Fall Out of Ohio Players Sunday.

The famous Lima Colored Giants will be the attraction at League park Sunday afternoon when they will cross bats with the Fort Wayne City team. The Giants have a big "rep" behind them and are coming to make things interesting for the Clearyites. The game will start at 3 o'clock. The Lima Giants will arrive in this city at 11 o'clock Sunday morning, coming from Lima on the traction line.

No word has been received from Manager Carr concerning the possibilities of a special car. Nearly all the colored people are planning to make a big demonstration for the visiting colored players.

Farnan, who has been in Huntington this week, will do the officiating job for the two teams. Distel and Heine will do the battery work for the locals. Distel has pitched some swell ball this season and has kept his hits well scattered.

The lineup of the two teams is as follows:

Motor Driven Vehicles Have Increased Seventy Per Cent in Six Years.

Boston, Mass., Aug. 26—Motor vehicle traffic in Massachusetts has increased at the rate of 70 per cent a year for the last six years while horse drawn traffic has increased 5 per cent a year. These statistics have been gathered from reports made on the use of the 1,100 miles of highways embraced in the state system.

In 1909 when the state highway commission made its first traffic census, taken at 238 points on the road system, 61 per cent of all vehicles passing these stations were drawn by horses and only 39 per cent were self propelled. The counts were made during fourteen hours each day for seven consecutive days.

In 1912 the percentage was reversed, 63 per cent being motor vehicles and 37 per cent horse drawn. But the annual report of the commission for 1915, just issued, shows that last year 82½ per cent of all traffic was motor driven.

During the six year period the total traffic carried by the roads increased 145 per cent, but motor vehicles increased 420 per cent while horse vehicles decreased 30 per cent.

The number of motor trucks increased in almost the same proportion as touring cars and runabouts in the three years from 1912 to 1915. The increase was 230 per cent for trucks compared with 114 for touring cars and 122 for runabouts.

There was an increase of over 61 per cent in the value of the automobile exports during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, over the same period ending June 30, 1915, according to figures compiled by the department of commerce.

During 1915-16, 77,496 vehicles valued at $97,464,381 were shipped abroad in addition to parts valued at $22,536,485. Of the machines exported 21,265 were commercial vehicles valued at $56,805,548 and 56,231 passenger cars valued at $40,658,833.

During the fiscal year of 1915 there were 37,376 vehicles exported, having a value of $60,254,635. The 1915 exports consisted of 13,996 commercial vehicles valued at $39,140,682 and 23,800 passenger cars valued at $21,113,953.

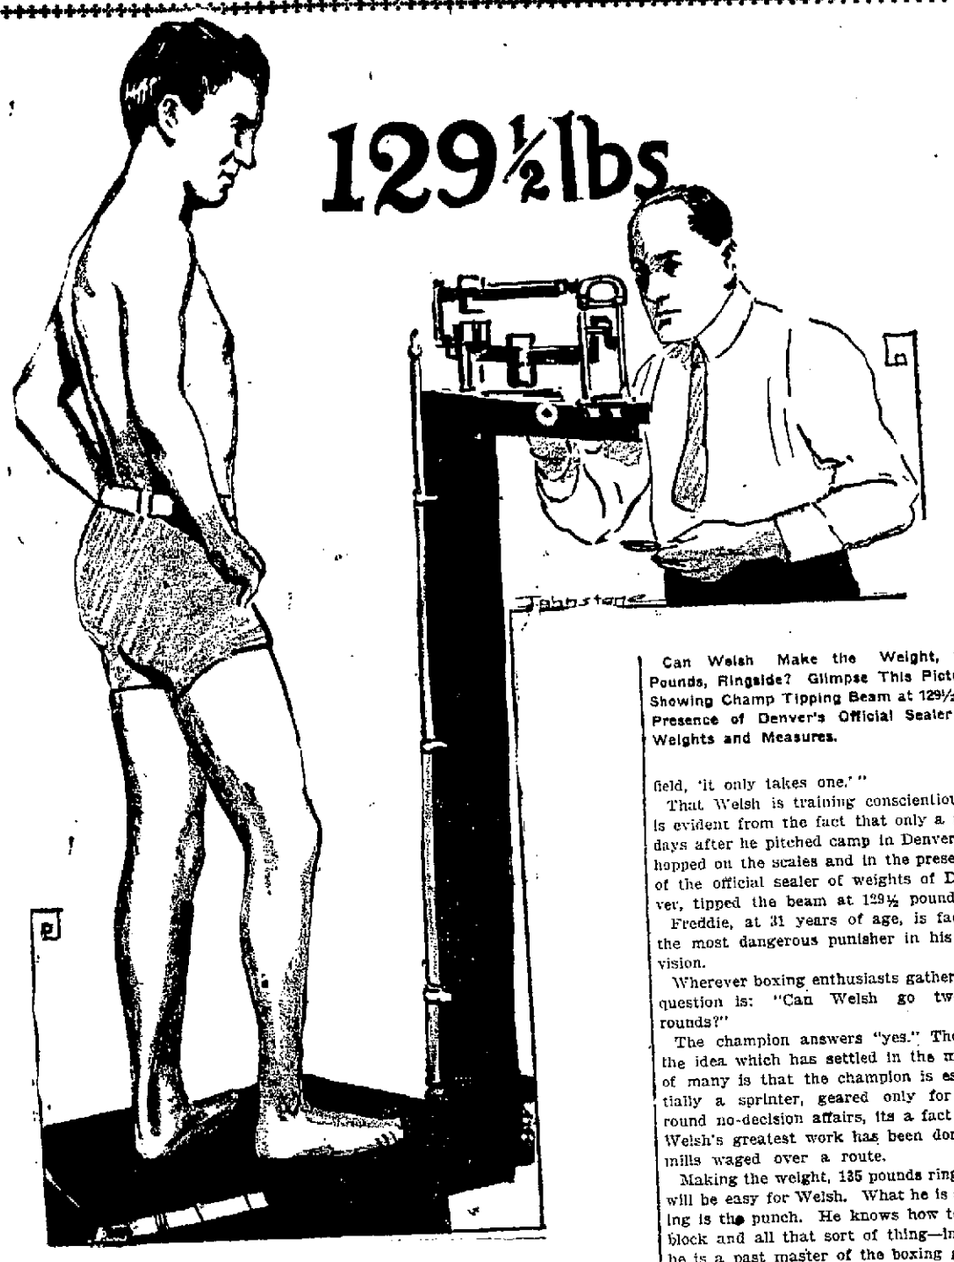
WELSH SAYS HE'LL DAZZLE WHITE WITH HIS SPEED, THEN WEAR HIM DOWN TO A KNOCKOUT!



Can Welsh Make the Weight, 135 Pounds, Ringside? Glimpse This Picture Showing Champ Tipping Beam at 129½ In Presence of Denver's Official Sealer of Weights and Measures.

(By Harold Johnson.)

Speed and ring generalship acquired in more than 150 bouts form the combination Freddie Welsh says will carry him through the lines at Denver Labor day when he defends his lightweight title against Charlie White.

The world's champion, in training at Colorado Springs, realizes the importance of perfect physical condition for the scrap. There's something that suggests seriousness in the attitude he assumes when he dons his gym togs—something even his closest pals never noticed during the last two years.

"Yes, I am serious about this match," said the Briton. "It's the first time in twenty-six months I have gone twenty rounds and naturally I am anxious about it.

"While I believe I can beat White over the route, you must not forget I have a lot of respect for him. He is a heavy hitter and as they say on the baseball field, 'it only takes one.'"

That Welsh is training conscientiously is evident from the fact that only a few days after he pitched camp in Denver he hopped on the scales and in the presence of the official sealer of weights of Denver, tipped the beam at 129½ pounds.

Freddie, at 31 years of age, is facing the most dangerous punisher in his division.

Wherever boxing enthusiasts gather the question is: "Can Welsh go twenty rounds?"

The champion answers "yes." Though the idea which has settled in the minds of many is that the champion is essentially a sprinter, geared only for ten round no-decision affairs, its a fact that Welsh's greatest work has been done in mills waged over a route.

Making the weight, 135 pounds ringside, will be easy for Welsh. What he is seeking is the punch. He knows how to hit, block and all that sort of thing—in fact he is a past master of the boxing game.

But the development of those muscles which place a fighter in the list of "knock 'em dead" gladiators was a trick overlooked by the Briton in his earlier training days. He was always satisfied to win on points.

Welsh believes he can baffle the Chicagoan so completely in a twenty round battle as to make him a mark for a knockout. Hence his desire to work up strength that will enable him to accomplish his ambition.

TENNIS TOURNAMENT MOVES ALONG NICELY

Plogsterth and Popp Look Fine in the City Doubles Play.

The tennis tournament of the city is moving along nicely, with the first round played and some of the second round. The committee is under a handicap because of the play being on so many courts in the city. When the play reaches the semi-finals and finals it will be carried on more swiftly.

Plogsterth and Popp are playing a fine game. Both are above the average tennis players and make some of the so-called sharks look funny when on the courts with them. They will probably win the doubles.

"Pop" Geers Drives Napoleon to a Victory Over Single G.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 26.—The closing day of the Grand circuit race meeting at North Randall Friday furnished one of the biggest surprises of the meeting when Billy Durfee placed Esperanza, a rank outsider, first in the summary in the 2:06 trot, winning the third and fourth heats after Joan, the favorite, had taken the opening mile, and Director the second. In the other events the favorites had fairly easy going.

"Pop" Geers rode his first winning race of the meeting when, with Napoleon Direct, he took the free-for-all pacing feature. He headed Single G and Hal Boy in three straight heats, but was compelled to step fast, going one last quarter in :27¾.

Ben White drove Lee Axworthy an exhibition mile but only equalled his record of 2:00¼ instead of beating it.

WELSH-WHITE GO TO AID RED CROSS

Colorado Springs, Col., Aug. 26.—Freddie Welsh has instructed Pommery Bob Vernon, the stakeholder in the Welsh-White contest here on Labor day, to turn over all money derived from the champion's share in the moving pictures to the Red Cross fund of Great Britain. It is probable that the fund will thus be enriched to the extent of several thousand dollars.

Welsh yesterday asked Lloyd's for a rate of insurance on each of his ten digits for $2,000 until the day of the fight, and the insurance bug Friday took possession of the noodle of Eddie Pitts, who arranged the match. He has opened negotiations for $100,000 insurance against rain on the day of the fight. He probably would pay only a small premium, as the likelihood of rain at that time in this vicinity is slight.

Both Welsh and White are donating to local hospitals 25 per cent of admissions the fans are paying to see the boys work out daily at Temple theater.

A surprise was sprung on Manager Pitts this morning when a prominent society woman of Colorado Springs requested that a certain section be set aside for women fight fans, and showing her own earnest intention by purchasing fifty seats to be used by a club of which she is a member. Acting on her suggestion Pitts has blocked off 300 seat for women, or women accompanied by male escorts.

According to a British scientist, X rays are the most extreme rays at the ultra-violet end of the spectrum.

One Minute Talks with Ballplayers

JOE TINKER, MANAGER CHICAGO CUBS:

"Look for the Red Sox and Phillies to meet again this fall in the world's series. I like the Phillies because they play like champions. Every man knows what the other is going to do and that is valuable on a team.

"Besides, Cravath, Luderus and Bancroft have started to hit. They did not bat early in the season and if they had I think the Phillies would have had the pennant cinched by now.

"Moran has three great pitchers in form in Alexander, Demaree and Rixey. I figure that each can pitch in about nine of the remaining forty games and each win six or more. That speed ought to settle the race."

GEORGE KELLY, NEW YORK GIANTS:

"It's sometimes hard to live down a name or a relationship. I don't mean to infer when I make this statement that I am sorry I am the nephew of Bill Lange, but you know when you are the nephew of one of the greatest stars the game ever produced you are more apt to be in the public eye while there is a lot more expected of you.

"No matter where I happen to be somebody invariably points me out with the illuminating remark: 'That's Bill Lange's nephew.' But I'm going to stick to baseball and hope some day to make a name for myself just as did Uncle Bill."

RELIGION, TEMPERANCE AND HEALTH

The Heart That is Kind Brings Blessed Lesson

How an Immigrant Boy Was Transformed Merely by the Love of a Dog.

(BY LOUISE H. GUYOL.)

Late one dark night, in a distant country, a dark haired, low-browed man crept through a dingy, narrow street, keeping close to the high, grim walls choosing to walk in the deepest shadows. Reaching the place that he called home, he kicked open the door, entered the room, closed the door and proceeded to rouse his sleeping family, consisting of wife and son and daughter, with more kicks and blows and curses. Having done this he turned again to his half-awakened wife and with another kick and blow, both of which the latter fortunately dodged, he savagely commanded:

"Pack up the things!"

"What have you done now?" his wife asked.

Another kick was all that she got for an answer. Silently she went about the packing of their things. The operation consisted of throwing upon the floor a shawl so brightly striped that it made a weird bit of inanimate gaiety in the dingy room. Into the shawl the woman tossed their few belongings, knotted the four corners together and then glanced inquiringly at her husband. He nodded his head, and she raised the bundle to her stooped shoulders.

"Get out!" the man ordered, with a kick for each of the three as they passed through the doorway.

"Come on!" he muttered, striding ahead. The two children and the woman followed father and husband through narrow, evil alleyways, around wicked, dark corners, through the lengths of lonely streets, until they came to a wharf. They followed him aboard a steamer, and down into the loneliest, darkest corner of the shadowy steerage deck.

"What have you done now?" the woman again inquired, when it was late into the night, and all were asleep except the huddled, fear-stricken family.

The man spat and made answer.

"I killed a man," he said.

"Another?"

His next answer was the equivalent of our matter of fact "of course." "I had to get away," he continued. "They were after me. He had money—today's man did."

The boy, lying near, heard him. The little girl heard him, and the parents knew that their children had heard, but an understanding having been reached, the man and his wife turned, and went to sleep.

So, fleeing from justice, the family came to America and, among many of their kind, made their home in a crowded quarter of a big city. There, until the boy was about fourteen and the little girl about nine, the father worked when he chose, and drank when he chose. He usually chose to drink and he beat his wife and his children.

Then, one merciful day, he died.

His widow wept and his little daughter wept, echoing her mother's loud grief. But Antonio, the dead man's son, stepped forth, seeking work.

The work was hard but the wages fair and the boy handed all that he earned to his mother. She, in turn, paid the rent and bought their food. With what was left, she purchased clothes. There were few clothes bought. She knew that Antonio gave her all that he earned, and he knew that she spent no penny in which he did not share. But life had meant to mother and son naught but combat and defense, so she tormented the boy because he did not bring home more money, and he defied her because she gave him so little to eat, and he was so hungry.

As is ever the way with the youthful mind, the world spelled to Tony what home had always spelled, the only difference lying in the fact that the world gave a bigger fighting ground, and a greater advantage of things to dodge. So, even as he had fought and dodged in the tiny room that was home, he dodged and fought in the big, outside world. When he did not succeed in dodging he was haled to the juvenile tribunal and sentenced, according to the weight of his offense.

"If you would only learn not to fight so much, Tony," the kind judge once told him. "You're not a bad boy, son. You've never been here for stealing, and I do not believe you have ever told me a lie. Can't you learn not to fight quite so much?"

"What else kin I do?" the boy asked, sullenly.

Before Tony's question was answered a lady rose in the court room. She was a representative of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. "May I have the boy?" she asked the judge. "If you will parole him I will stand sponsor for him."

And fifteen minutes later Tony started home, having in leash a little dog that the lady had given him.

The dog's name was Dixie.

As the days went by, slowly, but none the less surely, something hard, as hard and cruel as the things that his father had been wont to throw at him, seemed to be melting from Tony's breast. Slowly but surely in its place was growing something different—something gentle and glad, like the pawings and lickings of the little black and white dog who leaped gleefully to meet him every evening when he went home.

The world seems different to Tony. It is no longer a big place in which there is nothing to do but to fight and to dodge. The light of vague, new ideas has dawned in his brain, routing the black shades of his past.

And as with Tony, so with his family, for in that home a wonderful transformation has taken place, the old order of things has given away to a new and better one. With the advent of Dixie came one who did not throw things, who did not nag; who did not strike back when he was struck (he never was struck but once, then the sudden, surprised look that sprang in his eyes had forever afterwards the effect of miraculously controlling the inate cruelty of the superstitious, ignorant woman who had struck him); and whose devotion was as strong at the end of the month when food was scarce, as it was immediately after pay-day when there was nothing to eat, comparatively.

Today, one year since Dixie became Tony's companion, a new life is growing in that little room, in the crowded quarter of the great city where a family who had never heard of kindness nor justice nor mercy, and who had known naught but crime and cruelty, are at last learning these blessed lessons—and their teacher is a little half-breed dog —Our Dumb Animals.

BLESSED TO BE A BLESSING.

God blesses you that you may be a blessing to others. Then he blesses you a second time in being a blessing to others. It is the talent that is used that multiplies. Receiving, unless one gives in turn, makes one full and proud and selfish. Give out the best of your life in the Master's name for the good of others. Lend a hand to every one who needs. Be ready to serve at any cost those who require your service. Seek to be a blessing to every one who comes for but a moment under your influence. This is to be angel-like. It is to be God-like. It is to be Christlike. We are in this world to be useful. God wants to pass His gifts and blessings through us to others. When we fail as His messengers we fail of our mission.—J. R. Miller, D. D.

"THE INTERESTS OF THE CITY"

"That fellow makes me tired," said our millionaire friend at lunch recently. He referred to a young man who had been carrying on an animated conversation with somebody at a neighboring table. All we heard of the talk was that something or other was "demanded by the business interests of the city." It had something to do with liquor licenses, or gambling hells or Sunday saloons. "The truth is," continued our business friend, whose commercial relations reach five continents, "men of real value to a community, whose industries furnish employment for thousands of hands, know that nothing which ruins the citizen will benefit the city. The 'professional business man' is like the 'professional laboring man,' an arrant humbug. The prosperity of the city mainly depends upon precisely the same habits and customs and laws as the prosperity of the individual, and the real business men of any city know it."—Pacific.

The Liquor Question

Individual fitness calls for temperance. National preparedness, which includes individual fitness in every citizen, assuredly demands prohibition and abolition of the beverage liquor traffic. Is this logic? For the answer look to nations now at war and study their recent policies. Contemplate Russia, reincarnated and renewed after doing away with vodka, her chief national evil. Look at France, gloriously sustaining her finest traditions after abolishing her greatest evil, absinthe. See Great Britain restricting the liquor traffic, her "worst foe," and rising to heights of efficiency not before attained. In this country it is only necessary to look into the conduct and policies of our largest and most important industries and business concerns to find that as efficiency has been made paramount liquor and the drinker of booze have been barred. Where the public safety is in question the drinker has no chance and should have no chance for employment. Where responsibility is to be assumed the habitual drinker finds he is on the outside vainly looking in. Truly the prime requisite of personal preparedness is total abstinence, and one real need of national preparedness is the abolition of alcoholic beverages. This is not politics nor partisanship. It is sheer common sense based on honest experience. It does not mean malice toward any citizen nor abuse of those who uphold the existing system. It means simply the old order has proved to be potent chiefly for evil, and that the bad should give way to that which is better. All change should be hedged about with justice and logic no less than wholesome sentiment. In its essence the abolition of the beverage liquor traffic must be both sound and sane in methods as well as in aims. The movement against the liquor traffic is gaining today because the people are awakening to the reason and sanity of its wholesome demands.—Indiana Daily Times.

The Heavenly Home

A mother carefully shielded her little son from knowledge of, or contact with, death. She dreaded the day when he should ask her questions concerning the great mystery. She feared that she might not know how to answer his questions wisely and that word of hers might shock or estrange him from her or from God. She did, however, take her boy to Sunday school, to the beginners' department. At Easter he heard a story about Jesus and the heavenly home. One day they were on the streets when a lady passed who attracted the child's attention. She had silvery white hair.

She walked with slow and faltering steps. The little lad looked after her, then turned and said to his mother: "She is a heaven lady."

"A heaven lady?" repeated the mother and asked: "What do you mean?"

"Why, don't you know?" asked the child. "She is old, and soon she will be going to the heavenly home. She is a heaven lady."

The mother stood amazed at the power of a child to understand great truths when they are presented in a way the little child can understand, and she talked with him about death and dying. He told her what he thought. To die meant "going away." Heaven was the beautiful country to which some day "fathers and mothers and children are going." It was "just the sort of home children will like, because it is bright and shining," with no night there and no crying, because "the Heavenly Father and Jesus are there, taking care of everybody and making them happy." As mother and child turned toward home her heart rejoiced.

NOT FOR SALE.

Some folks think that the only things in the world that have value are the things one can handle and buy and sell. There are things that are not on the market. They are not for sale, and they cannot be bought. The Church stands for value. It counts its assets not in the amount of money its members possess, but in the character they possess. Money may pass, and business fail, and houses burn, but character will last through eternity. This is what Jesus was talking about all the time. Salvation through Christ's blood will be manifested in character. Character cannot be bought; it is what a man is. The Church deals with the timeless and the eternal verities. Reputation is what we think a man is, but character is what he is. That is a wide difference. The Church stands for the noblest, the best. Let us give ourselves to the real meaning of Christ and the Church, and welcome with all our hearts that gospel which brings uplift and cleanness of soul and heart. Let us welcome it into our hearts, so that we may be, in fact, the children of God.

PRAY MORE.

The great lack of our lives is that we do not pray more. And there is no failure so disastrous or criminal as this. It is very difficult to account for it. If, in all times of discouragement and vicissitudes we could have access to one of the wisest and noblest of our fellow creatures or to some venerated departed saint or to the guardian angel deputed to attend our steps, how strong and brave we should become! Whatever our needs, we would at once seek His august presence and obtain his counsel and assistance. How extraordinary is our behavior, then, with respect to prayer and that we make so little of our opportunities of access into the presence of our Father in whom wisdom, power, and love blend perfectly and who is always willing to hear us—nay, is perpetually urging us to come. "This is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask according to his will, he heareth us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desire of him."—Vanguard.

Ten Minutes With a Corrupt Mayor.

A young pastor had just taken charge of a church in a city of 25,000 population. He was eager for work, but he was amazed when some of the leaders in the church told him they felt it was his duty to attack the city government in his sermons or otherwise.

"The mayor is a disgrace to the city, his department chiefs are like himself, and the members of the council are followers of evil. The city is famous for the corruption in high places. You must do something."

However, the young pastor declined to move until he became better acquainted with the situation. He wished to make no mistake, so he waited with open eyes.

The time came when he felt he must act. But he did not preach a sermon directed at the mayor and his associates, nor did he rush into print. After prayer for guidance, he called the mayor on the telephone and asked for an appointment.

"I want ten minutes of your time," he said.

Next morning the minister was shown into the office of the mayor, who looked him over with some curiosity. Evidently he wondered what could be the errand of his visitor.

"Pardon me if I look at my watch," the minister said. "I must keep my promise to leave the office in ten minutes."

Then, after a few moments of general conversation, he stated his errand: "I want to congratulate you on the honor and responsibility that were laid on you when you were chosen mayor of this city. But I want to tell you that there is a greater honor waiting for you—something far bigger than the office of mayor of a city like this."

The heart of the mayor bounded. He thought of possible political preferment; he had dreamed of this. Could this stranger be the emissary of some powerful politician?

Curiously he listened to the next words of the visitor: "You ought to be a servant of the Lord Jesus Christ."

In astonishment the official replied: "No one ever spoke to me like this before."

The pastor rose, looked at his watch and held out his hand. "I must go," he said; "time is up."

Next day there was a call at the minister's telephone; the mayor asked for him. "Won't you come and talk to me?" he asked, his voice giving evidence of his agitation. "I have thought of what you said to me ever since you left. I must see you!"

Two weeks later the mayor united with the church of which the minister was pastor. But the work did not stop there. The chief of police, the head of the fire department and five aldermen confessed Christ, and became church members.

Then the government of the city was cleaned up. The work the officers of his new charge had demanded of the young minister had been done, but not in the way they had planned.—John T. Faris, D. D., in the Sunday School Times.

"DRINK YE ALL OF IT."

HOUSES SHOULD KEEP HEAT OUT AND HEALTH IN.

If you would keep in health, build your house to keep out heat.

The man who wants to keep well now gives as much attention to this problem as he does to keeping out the cold in wintertime.

For a number of years the question of insulating dwellings against heat has been studied by German sanitarians and scientists, with the result that houses are now being built and so constructed as to afford material immunity from excessive heat. Think what this will mean to the crowded city dweller.

A study of pneumonia death rates shows that there are comparatively few deaths caused by cold. It would seem then more important to protect dwellers from heat than cold.

The ramshackle building, of course, is no protection against either. There can be no question but people should be properly housed. This means protection from the weather be they what they may.

Properly insulating the walls and the foundations of dwellings, so as to afford material protection from excessive heat, would also mean protection against cold in the winter, and reduction in fuel bills.

In tropical countries where the United States public health service is in charge, it insists upon ratproof dwellings as a protection against bubonic plague.

It is quite within the possibilities that within the near future in large cities sanitation legislation will provide laws for the proper protection of city dwellers from the dangers and discomforts of torrid summers when adults suffer and babies die by the thousands.

Rocking.

A common fault in caring for babies is permitting them to be violently rocked or jumped up and down on the knee.

Constant, violent motion of this kind upsets a baby's stomach and disturbs the nervous system. It is particularly apt to do so during the hot summer weather when baby's stomach at best is a little squeamish.

As a mother should immediately consult a physician if her baby is sick instead of trying to treat it herself, unless it be a simple matter with which she is familiar, it is well for the mother to know the signs which indicate that baby is not well.

An ailing baby is not inclined to smile, is restless and cross, with dull heavy eyes.

It is feverish and does not sleep well.

In warm weather it is well to remember that baby is thirsty just as you are. Give him plenty of cooled boiled water to drink.

On hot days in addition to the daily bath, sponge him off two or three times more. It helps to keep him well and comfortable.

Start early to teach baby regular habits in regard to eating, sleeping and bowel movements. Such habits are of utmost importance in keeping baby well especially in summer when heat makes trouble for most infants.

Hay Fever.

Hay fever cures seem to be a matter of personal taste.

At this time of year every sneezer hauls forth his pet cure and between kerchoos lauds its virtues to the skies. It is rare, however, to find any two who agree upon "cures."

Physicians and a great majority of the victims of this annual ailment know it is caused by wind-pollinated weeds, that is, weeds whose fluffy, light pollen is blown about on the breeze. These weeds are many, including species of rag-weed, cocklebur, fleabane and many grasses.

Pollen from these weeds has an exceedingly irritating effect upon the delicate membrane or lining of the air passages of susceptible persons. It creates a condition in the human system similar to that which causes hives.

Science so far has been unable to make use of this knowledge concerning the ailment to effect cures or prevent the affliction.

Some sufferers are apparently cured or at least greatly relieved by a change of climate, but this treatment does not benefit all victims. Others find great relief in using cotton plugs in the nostrils, which act as filters, but again this is of little value for others. Serums made from pollens help in some cases, but not all.

Some find relief by cutting starch and sugar from the diets.

People frequently submit to an operation on the nose in effort to find relief.

It is now generally agreed, however, that the best preventive is to keep weeds on vacant lots cut often enough to prevent their flowering. Members of the hay fever association, an organization of brethren in distress, devote considerable effort on an annual "cut-the-weeds" campaign.

Many American cities now have ordinances, which they enforce, compelling citizens and heads of business houses to see that weeds are cut regularly on vacant lots adjoining private residences or places of business. New Orleans has taken the lead in such civic campaigns.

THE LIBERTY WORTH HAVING.

One of Mr. Moody's stories was to the effect that at one time he was talking with a gentleman who told him of an experience he had in the south. As a young man, just graduated from Yale, he accepted a position as teacher in Mississippi. On one occasion he was walking with a companion along a country road, when he came to a sign, saying, "Liberty, forty miles." Just then an old slave came along the road, and the young men thought they would have some fun. They stopped him, and asked him what the signpost said. The aged negro shook his head and said: "De ole slave don't read in dis yer country." "Well," they replied, "that post says it is only forty miles to Liberty." If it's that near, why don't you go there?" The old slave smiled sadly as he answered:

"Dat ar's a sham, young Massa, but if it pointed up dar," raising his trembling hand toward heaven, "to de liberty wherewith Christ makes us free, dat ar wouldn't be no sham." The old slave, with all his ignorance, had experienced in his own soul a liberty of which the young men knew nothing.

An Engineer's Story; Isn't This Worth While?

Railroad Man Tells of His Battle With Satan and of Help He Now Finds Ever Present.

(By Henry W. Adams.)

I am a locomotive engineer, and was wonderfully converted about thirteen years ago. For the first four or five months I was so blessed and joyful that everything seemed new. I was so full of joy I was just glad to do anything for Jesus Christ.

But one morning I awoke from my sleep and found that my joy was gone. My besetting sin had been to get out of patience, and I would almost go crazy and do things that I would be sorry for afterward. Well, this morning I was late getting up, and the enemy told me I could keep my religion and tell my wife that it was her fault we were late; but I bit my lip and said nothing. I hurried to my work, only to find that some one had stolen part of my tools, and again the devil told me I could have religion and tell the dispatcher some things; but I held my peace.

When we got the engine ready, the conductor, having had some words with the yardmaster, began to take his spite out by abusing me. Again the devil wanted me to tell him a few things, but I held back until, in going about my work, it seemed that every signal that conductor gave me was a curse, and I could stand it no longer. The devil kept saying, "Go and give him a piece of your mind," and finally I called the fireman to come and take the engine, and I got down with the intention of having a regular fight with the conductor. But the Spirit of the Lord got hold of me, and I ran to the river bank, which was about two rods away; and there, under the trunk of a tree that was lying under the bank, I hid myself and cried my heart out to the Lord. He heard my cry and commenced talking with me, and I began to consecrate my life to Him: my wife, my children, my position, my talents, my money, my time, myself, all to the glory of God; and when the consecration was complete there came into my soul a peace and a joy which was "unspeakable and full of glory," and ever since that time, in every test, and in every trial, amid persecution and tribulation, this joy has remained.

Sometimes it manifests itself in praises to God until I feel this old world cannot hold me long; and again, when the devil is raging, it comes in a calm rest that makes me feel that my Christ is able to make a way for me where there is no way; and all the time I have this joy which is my strength welling up in my soul.

The bible says, "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." Praise the Lord forever. Yes, and the Lord took care of my job while I was settling it. It took me about two hours to settle it and make a complete consecration, but God took care of my interests while I was doing it.

While I write, the thought of God's love and mercy to me makes me rejoice and feel safe in his hands.

How to Believe

Faith always acts without effort. If we find that it requires an effort for us to exert our faith, this is because we have lost our faith. Faith never has to "try" to be faith; the moment it tries, it ceases to be faith. If we say to a friend, "I am going to try to believe in you," those very words declare that we do not believe in him. We do not have to try to believe in one in whom we have confidence. The facts that we know about the life of a really trusted friend are such that our faith in him acts without effort or trying on our part; it is spontaneous, automatic. So of our faith in Christ. When we are trying to trust Him to meet our needs, we are distrusting Him. The way to get over this failure of effort-making faith, which is not faith at all, is to face the facts about Christ. It is what we know of the facts of a friend's character and life that makes our faith in him spontaneous and instinctive. When we stop to think who Christ is, what the perfection of His character is, what are the sufficiency and completeness of His saving and keeping work, then we forget all about our faith in our unconscious confidence and satisfaction in the Perfection at which we are looking. To have a great faith, we need only face our great Christ.—S. S. Times.

Putting on Christ.

Victor David Brener, who put the face of Lincoln on the penny, preferred the penny to the half-dollar. Why? Just because Lincoln's face on the penny would jingle in the pockets of more people—those common people of whom Lincoln said: "God must love the common people, because He made so many of them." The Lincoln penny represents more than an artistic or commercial triumph. Brener's ideal was to make Lincoln's face on the penny reveal so much of the heart of the great president that even a discouraged laborer might find comfort from the last penny in his pocket by looking upon the face of Lincoln.

Paul tells us to put on Christ. The Christian's duty—yes, the Christian's joy—is to imprint the face of Christ on human hearts. It does not take the greatest preacher or prophet to accomplish it. The humblest disciple may perform this crowning work.

The Word is Truth.

The Word of God is the miracle of all ages. It meets the needs of every generation, it is never out of date and never outgrown; its truths are never proved to be merely provincially attitudes and opinions, but it is, for all men in all lands in all centuries, the one infallible storehouse of eternal truth. No partisan and prejudiced assertions are contained in it, no statements that contradict true science, and no teachings that traverse the truth. Men have sometimes misapplied and misunderstood its teachings, but the words of Jesus, in His intercessory prayer to the Father for His people, as recorded by John, have stood through all centuries: "Thy Word is Truth." There is much to provoke thought in the saying: "The Bible is not a book containing a revelation; but the Bible is a revelation taking the risk of a book."—Exchange.

GETTING RIGHT WITH MEN.

Our bitter feeling toward any human being means defeat in every part of our life. We cannot be right with God while we are wrong with a fellow-man; only the lives that are right with God are winning lives. That is a striking word in a letter from Dan Crawford, the African missionary: "What a settling of old scores there is when the blood of the cross cleanseth away all crookedness between a man and a man, as well as a man and his God. Your straight, strapping African can often be crooked enough; but here we have the change; and now you have a man who is straight of back as well as straight of life, who believes the new doctrine that no man treats Christ well who treats his brother wrong."—S. S. Times.

ON TIME.

Every unnecessary delay is a defeat. So it is a sin. We can be completely forgiven as we confess the sin; but this forgiveness does not get the delayed matter done on time. That traditional reply of Alexander the Great, quoted in a recent "Illustration Round Table," of The Sunday School Times, ought to be engraved deeply in the heart of every Christian. Asked how he was always victorious, the great military genius replied, "Simply by not delaying." We cannot conceive of Jesus, when He was here in the flesh, as ever being late in the doing of a duty. Always victorious, He never delayed. What a revolutionizing change not delaying would bring into the lives of most of us! Shall we start this new victory today?—S. S. Times.

NATURE'S SOFT DRINK.

Nature as a soft drink manufacturer has them all beat.

Her materials are the rain, the dew, the sand, and the sun.

By a mystical chemistry which puts that of the white-aproned men with test-tubes to shame, she works for months and has ready for man in the days that are dryest and hottest the bright-colored drink that will quench his thirst.

We shall answer our riddle by given you another which you may have answered as a child:

"I came to the party in my green dress and they said I was just 'showing off.'

"I came in my white dress, and they said they didn't like it.

"I came in my black dress, and they cast me aside.

"But when I came in my red dress, they picked me up and kissed me."

In the middle of a hot afternoon when the thirst for the artificial "soft drinks" comes upon you, step into a lunch room and order a slice of watermelon.

There's not as much food in it as there is in an ice cream soda. It's a drink, nature's soft drink.

FRENCH AIRMEN FIGHT LIKE HAWKS

JEAN NAVARRE

Aeroplane Battles Are Being Fought at Greater Altitude Since Aviators of Allies Wage War Alone.

IT is a man to man fight in the air now in the war in Europe—one man battling with another, just one man to each aeroplane. Combined attacks by squadrons of fliers will be made, but the fighting above the clouds will be done by the dare-devils who fly alone and who will in the future convoy the bomb-laden planes.

The German has shown the world what one man can do, what the individual can accomplish in the way of embarrasing a big battleship, what one converted cruiser can do in the way of fighting a nation. But it has been left to the French to show that one man is better than two in air fighting.

Pierre Navarre, the pride of the French nation, has done it. He is only a boy, with the fear of death so far removed from his manly heart that even his swift, new Nieuport, his especially designed single-seat biplane couldn't catch it if it tried.

There is one thing harder than the capture of Verdun, and that is to get an aviator to tell of his exploits. If he fails in his exploit, he never comes back alive. If he does come back he is a hero, and these war aviators are modest heroes with many medals of bravery pinned to their coats. But their officers never stop sounding their praise, and this is the story as it is being told in Paris about Pierre Navarre, twin brother Jean, and others.

Formerly Pierre and Jean carried gunners in their parasol monoplanes. The twins did the driving and the diving, the gunners attended to the firing. Then one day Pierre suddenly became angry at a Fokker which he was trying to dislodge from a cloud and dove straight down upon it. The gunner was so startled he forgot to use his disc of forty bullets and the Fokker escaped.

"I'll do my own shooting," Pierre announced, and was provided with a single seat and a gun mounted forward.

"I'll be swifter than they," he explained. "I'll have less weight. I'll be able to mount higher and can run in, fire and loop out so quickly the Fokkers won't know what to do."

His argument proved true. The other day he was surrounded by six Fokkers inside the German lines. They were on every side of him and on top and below.

"The Sudden Loop Threw the German Officer Into Space."

He waited until they maneuvered closer, then he suddenly made three little loops and found himself close to one, with all the other five behind him. None of the enemy could fire upon him without hitting some of their own machines. He shot down one of the Fokkers and escaped from the others by diving, looping and speeding.

"The secret is never to be in a rush until the proper time," Pierre told his commanding officer. "An aviator should never use his machine gun until he knows that he is going to hit what he is aiming at."

Pierre's advice should be good. He has been flying six months and has fought forty duels in the air, mostly alone. He has nineteen notches on his machine gun. The air men of the allies have ethics all their own in counting their victims. They agree that they shall count only those that fall within the allies' lines, and those that fall within the enemy's lines, which are officially verified. Originally they counted only those that fell within their own lines, but with the advent of the Fokkers, which were forbidden to leave the German lines for fear their secret would be revealed, the French more and more took to crossing over to the enemy's air for battle.

Pierre's heart and soul is in his work of dueling. Early before daybreak he is in his machine napping, ready to dart into the clouds at the first warning that an enemy flyer is approaching. One morning recently he was dosing in his seat. The weather was bad, and although the look-out for aeroplanes was kept as vigilant as ever, no one expected an air raid that day.

Pierre was away and into the sky before the officer could give the command. The two machines met above the River Marne. Pierre dashed in to 30 yards of the enemy and fired twelve balls at the birdman. They all hit the motor and down came the German within the French lines. The German was promptly captured by the soldiers and Pierre soon returned unhurt.

"See?" he said. "I'd rather fight them by myself. It's quicker work."

"You see," he told the officer, "the only way to fight the German airman is to confuse him. You must fall suddenly, dance on one wing and then on the other, loop the loop, tumble hundreds of yards at a time, dash in, circle the enemy, flurry around, flutter like you are hit, dart up, then down, dumfound the German and shoot him."

The gunners were not particularly put out because this boy of nerve did not want them along.

Pierre and several like him are waging a terrible war on the enemy. A German flier knows that when he meets a French boy he will have to fight to the death, and then probably not escape. For instance, in March a year ago, so Paris tells, Pierre's brother shot away all of his fireballs and bullets.

The German, an Albatross, hung on, and Jean made it a personal matter. He transformed himself and machine into a hawk and lit on the enemy feet first, literally tearing it into shreds with his dive. Both landed safely, but the German got a touch of warfare in mid-air that no doubt set him thinking.

Now it has become a fight to the finish always, one way or another. Jean the other day, before he suffered two rifle balls in his shoulder and was sent to the American hospital, gave combat to a Fokker containing two men, the aviator and the gunner. A broadside put the French machine gun out of commission. Turning, the French boy cut off the tail of the enemy machine with his propeller blade.

The enemy was dashed to death. Jean, in tumbling through the air from the recoil of the "pesonal" attack, decided that his propeller was shattered and his engine dead. He quietly but quickly righted his "baby," as he calls his aeroplane, and volplaned to his own lines.

In order for one man to fly an aeroplane and fight at the same time, it is necessary, in the first place, to risk his life before he fires a bullet. Pierre has arranged the machine so that he must stand up, let go of his steering apparatus, fire and regain control of the machine, all at the most critical moment.

"It is this way," he explained while begging for permission to fight his battles alone. "You got to dart around up there.

Since the attack on Verdun began and the one-man policy of fighting in the air has proven efficient and popular, the air battles have been waged mostly at between 9000 and 12,000 feet altitude. A year ago they were fighting at between 3000 and 4000 feet.

If death can be turned into a comedy, the airmen of France will do it. They are still telling about a commander who went so high above the clouds that he lost all sense of direction, despite his air compass, and finally alighted behind the German lines in a fog.

Surrounded by soldiers before he could get away, the commander was strapped to his seat and a German officer climbed on to one wing.

"Now take me over the French lines and fly low. Here's my revolver, and if you attempt to alight I will kill you and pilot the machine myself."

The commander complied. He flew up and down the French trenches. The German divided his attention between the pilot and the enemy below.

"I have seen enough; return to the German lines," the captor ordered.

The Frenchman, so Paris says, turned toward the enemy's camp. He suddenly mounted higher, then as quickly turned a double loop. Strapped in, the Frenchman was safe. The German officer flew off into space and to death below. The Frenchman then returned to his own lines.

FIFTEENTH INSTALLMENT

SYNOPSIS.

Lieut. Jarvis Hope reports findings on the invention of Dr. Ralph Burke. On the trial trip of the inventor's boat, a Japanese helper is surprised in the act of examining the mechanism. Attempt to burglarize Burke's laboratory fails; later his daughter Cleo finds him murdered in his bedroom. Cleo sells her father's books; she finds a note from which she learns they contain secret formula. Olga Ivanoff and Gerald Morton, spies in search of formula, attempt to capture Cleo. Hope rushes to her aid. Hope and Cleo escape and attend ball at Mrs. Delmar's, whose nephew has two missing books. Mahlin, a spy, attempts to steal books. Hope and Cleo take boat for an island. After a violent storm Hope and Cleo arrive on strange island and discover man they hunt is there. Mahlin and Japanese also reach the island. They escape from Hope but return and dynamite the shack. Hope and Cleo manage to reach Sandsboro, where Doctor Owen has one of the books. He arranges to meet Hope at the hotel with book. Morton poses as Hope and but for an earthquake would have possessed the volume. Cleo is captured by Morton and taken to cabin in the mountains. She finds there book for which they search. Fortunately she gets note to Hope, who, with Hook, starts to rescue. As he crosses chasm on swinging cable Mahlin steals up and chops at cable with an ax. Hook appears in time to save Hope. He reaches the other side and is greeted by Cleo; she swears her love to him. They are followed by Mahlin and Jap who attempt to kidnap Cleo. She swings herself over the canyon. Olga and Morton are dashed to earth in an aeroplane. Hope and Cleo are pulled from quicksands by Hook and a grapevine. Mahlin and Satsuma are called before the Black Council. On the track of another book, they find the owner has lost it. Hope receives a letter demanding his marriage to a girl who claims he compromised her. He is forced to comply by Cleo. Accidentally he learns it is a plot to rope him in. He is later summoned to Washington. Morton and Olga are cared for by a rancher who warns them against Carillo the bandit. They venture too far from the ranch and are captured by the outlaws. Carillo offers Morton his freedom for ransom. Olga finds one of the books in the cabin. She kills Carillo and escapes, but Morton takes the book from her and flees. Hope learns that Cleo is the daughter and heir of Calvin Montgomery, Gerald Morton's uncle. He finds her in Sacramento. Olga traces Morton to his room where she confronts him. An attempt to kill him ends in her death at his hands. Cleo is kidnaped from the hotel, while Hope is away.

"I am Miss Burke," said Cleo, addressing the driver of the closed taxicab which she found standing at the curb in front of her hotel. "Is this the car Lieutenant Hope sent for me?"

"Yes'm," replied the man, a short, thickset fellow, whose features were effectually concealed by the upturned collar of his coat, a pair of goggles and a visored cap which was pulled well down over his face. "He said I was to drive you to the Cliff house and he'd meet you there."

The most direct route to the Cliff house leads through Golden Gate park. Instead of keeping to the main thoroughfare, however, the driver, when well into the park, turned down one of the innumerable branch drives, which, owing to the greater intervals between its lamps, was comparatively dark, and brought his vehicle to an abrupt halt in the dense shadow of an immense live oak. The car had barely stopped before the door was flung open, a man sprang inside, a revolver was pushed into Cleo's face and a hoarse voice warned her, "Not a sound, Miss Burke, if you value your life." Almost simultaneously the driver threw open the other door, and in an instant the terrified girl was securely bound and gagged and the car sped away.

When the car finally stopped, the man beside her threw open the door, and, aided by the driver, removed the gag and untied the cords with which she was bound, but the circulation had been checked so long that her limbs refused to support her and her captors had to assist her to the ground. There was no moon, but by the faint light of the stars she made out that they had stopped in the shadow of a low, windowless building, evidently a storehouse of some sort, at the end of a long and disused pier,

This much she had time to see before her captors, unlocking the door of the storehouse, half led, half pushed her inside. The feeble light of the lantern revealed the evil, cruel faces of Mahlin and Satsuma.

It was Mahlin who broke the silence.

"We have brought you here in order to ask you some questions, Miss Burke," he began, politely enough, but the look in his eyes belied the suavity of his tone. "If you answer them truthfully you will not be harmed.

"I want to know," he said, advancing until his face was within a few inches of hers and fixing her with his steely eyes, "what you have done with the book on metallurgy?"

"I . . . I don't know what you mean," she stammered.

"Yes you do," snarled Mahlin. "You know the book I mean—the one that that doctor handed you in the restaurant at Sandsboro, just before the earthquake."

"Oh, that book," said Cleo, obviously surprised. "But there was nothing in it—no formula, I mean."

"No matter about the formula," said Mahlin roughly. "Where is the book now? Who has it?"

"I suppose Lieutenant Hope has it," she answered. "At least he brought it back with him from Sandsboro, though I haven't seen it since."

"Are you telling me the truth?" demanded Mahlin, seizing her by the shoulder and staring at her so closely that she quailed.

"Of course I'm telling you the truth," she answered with spirit.

"I'm going to find out if you are," he answered, moving toward the door. "God help you if you have lied to me, young woman. If you have you'll wish that you had never been born."

"Come along, Satsuma," he called to the Japanese. "We must be getting back to town."

When Hope, returning to the hotel with Johnstone, learned from the clerk that Cleo had left an hour before, so frantic was the young officer with anxiety and grief that for a time the lawyer feared for his sanity.

But, despite his grief, he neglected nothing which might lead to Cleo's rescue. He promptly communicated with the police and within an hour a score of plain-clothes men were scouring the city.

"We're doing everything in our power, Mr. Hope," the chief of police assured him. "I have fifty men working on the case now, but it looks to me like a clean get-away."

As Hope was leaving police headquarters a patrol wagon backed up to the curb and out of it scrambled two policemen escorting a tall and fashionably dressed young man on whose wrists glittered handcuffs.

"Great heavens!" he exclaimed; "it's Gerald Morton."

Following Morton and his guards into the station, Hope beckoned to the inspector who was on duty.

"What is he charged with?" he asked, indicating Morton.

"Murder," the inspector answered laconically. "Stabbed a woman."

"Do you know who she was?" asked Hope, his heart momentarily standing still as he thought of the missing Cleo.

"She claimed to be a Russian countess," was the answer. "Her name was Ivanoff—Olga Ivanoff."

Hope gave a prolonged whistle of surprise.

"Is she dead?" he demanded.

"Yes," was the reply.

"Is there any objection to my having a word with him?" asked Hope.

"Not in the least," said the inspector, and ordered a patrolman to bring the prisoner into his office.

"Hello, lieutenant," remarked Morton, nonchalantly, as, still handcuffed, he was led into the room. "I didn't expect to meet you here."

"Morton," said Hope, looking the other in the eye, "Miss Burke was kidnaped this evening. I understand from the police that you could not have been concerned in it . . . but do you know who is? I won't pretend that I'm sorry for you, Morton, for I'm not, but if you can give me any information that will help me find her, I'll do what I can to help you."

"I don't know anything about it, Hope," said Morton; "not this time. I give you my word I don't. If I could help you find her, I would. Not for your sake, mind," he added bitterly, "but for hers. She's a mighty game little girl. I'm sorry I can't help you."

Hope turned away disconsolately, but the other called him back.

"Are you still looking for the secret of the submarine?" he asked, lowering his voice so that the police could not hear.

"Yes," said Hope listlessly, "I am—or rather I was until Cleo disappeared."

"Did you keep that book on metallurgy—the one that Olga and I tried to get away from Doctor Owen in the restaurant in Sandsboro?"

"Yes, it's among my things somewhere."

Morton leaned forward until his lips were close to Hope's ear.

"Turn to page sixty-one and read every seventh word," he whispered. "If you find Cleo," he continued in a louder tone, "tell her that I told you this so as to make up, as much as I can, for the way I treated her. The secret won't be of much use to me in the place I'm going," and he laughed hoarsely as he joined the waiting officer and was led back to his cell. That was the last Hope saw of Gerald Morton. Three months later he paid for his crime on the gallows at San Quentin.

* * * * * * *

It was long after midnight when Hope returned to his hotel, but, notwithstanding the lateness of the hour and his utter weariness, he ransacked his trunks until he unearthed the work on metallurgy.

The seventh word on the page was, Hope found, "examine," which seemed promising. Again he counted seven and was rewarded with the word "cover," which apparently failed to make sense, but the next word in order was "of," which again raised his hopes, and in wild excitement he completed the hidden sentence, which read: "Examine cover of this book."

Inserting the blade of his pocket knife into the edge of the lining, he carefully worked it back and forth until it curled back. At is did so Hope gave a little exclamation of satisfaction, for, sandwiched between the lining and the cover itself, was a small square of tissue paper. Drawing it out, he read in Doctor Burke's handwriting: "The formula of my submarine invention will be found in a secret drawer under the glass tank of my working model. —R. B."

Hope felt that the mystery now was as good as solved. The key was in his hands. Mentally and physically exhausted, he threw himself upon the bed, and despite the fears and anxieties that assailed him, was almost instantly asleep. So soundly did he sleep, indeed, that it was nearly noon when he was awakened by someone pounding at his door. It proved to be a bellboy with a special delivery letter.

"If you wish to see Miss Burke alive," it ran, "come to 1121 Panuco street at nine o'clock this evening, bringing with you the work on metallurgy which formerly belonged to Doctor Burke. The door will be unlocked. Enter without ringing, ascend three flights of stairs and give four short raps on the door at the left. If you communicate with the police or bring anyone with you, it will result in Miss Burke's death. The only way you can save her is to follow these directions to the letter."

* * * * * * *

For an hour Hope sat lost in thought. He made up his mind that, in order to ensure Cleo's safety, he must see the adventure through alone. But he had formulated a plan which, he hoped, would secure Cleo's release without the necessity of divulging the secret.

No neighborhood in San Francisco has a more evil reputation than Panuco street. No. 1121 Hope found was a narrow, four-story building which, in days long passed, had evidently been a residence of considerable pretension, but which had now fallen into a sad state of neglect and disrepair. As Hope ascended the steps, there came, from an areaway across the street, a shrill whistle, twice repeated. The kidnapers were on the watch and the two whistles were a signal to those within the house that he was unaccompanied. Swinging open the door, Hope found himself in such inky blackness that he had to strike a match in order to find the stairway. Lighting his way with matches, Hope cautiously ascended three flights of stairs. The room he was seeking was evidently on the top floor of the house. Drawing out his pistol, he cocked it, replaced it in his right-hand pocket, and then, as bidden in the letter, gave four brisk raps on the door on the left, which instantly swung open. In the doorway, his face lighted by the lamp that he held above his head, was Mahlin.

"Ha," said Hope, recognizing his former antagonist, "I rather suspected it was you I had to deal with. Where's your Jap side-partner?"

"Just behind you," replied Mahlin, and Hope, listening, heard on the stairs the footfalls of a person stealthily ascending. A moment later Satsuma joined them.

"Come in," said Mahlin briefly.

"Now," said Mahlin brusquely, when Satsuma had closed the door, "we've no time to waste, so let's get down to business. Did you bring the book?"

"Yes," replied Hope.

"Good—let's see it."

"Not quite so fast, my friend," replied the officer. "You don't get the book until Miss Burke has been released."

"Miss Burke will be released as soon as you hand over the book," declared Mahlin. "On my honor."

"You haven't any," sneered Hope. "I intend to keep the book until you release Miss Burke. I don't have to trust you and I'm not going to."

"If you don't hand over the book I'll take it," snarled Mahlin, and raised his hand as though giving a signal. Hope, who had come prepared for treachery, whirled about with the quickness of thought. Nor was he an instant too soon, for, not a pace away, was Satsuma, in his upraised hand a knife. Hope, acting with the lightninglike decision of a trained boxer, launched an uppercut which caught the Japanese squarely on the point of the jaw. Under the terrific impact of the blow Satsuma's head snapped back as though his neck was broken, reeling backward, his legs struck the low windowsill, and, too dazed to save himself from Hope's impact, he plunged outward and downward to the stone-paved court, four stories below. So quickly did it occur that before Mahlin fully realized what had happened, Hope was again facing him and he was looking into the muzzle of the officer's weapon.

"Hands up," ordered Hope curtly, and Mahlin, recognizing the futility of resistance, sullenly obeyed.

"I am pressed for time," said Hope, taking out his watch, "so I can only give you three minutes in which to decide whether you are going to tell me where Miss Burke is."

"Will you let me go if I tell you where the girl is?" asked Mahlin, visibly weakening. "Will you give me your word not to turn me over to the police?"

"If Miss Burke is unharmed I shall not mention your name to the police . . . but if you've injured a hair of her head I'll send you to San Quentin for life."

"You hold the winning hand," growled Mahlin, capitulating. "Do you know where Suisun bay is?"

"Yes."

"On the south shore, about half way between Martinez and Cornwall, there's an abandoned pier. At the end of it there's an old storehouse. She's in there."

Picking his way down the stairs in the darkness, Hope gave a sigh of relief as the door of the empty house closed behind him and he found himself in the open air again. Hastening to the nearest drug store he telephoned for a touring car, stipulating that the driver must be familiar with the roads leading to Suisun bay. He stopped at the hotel to pick up the anxious Hook.

To reach the bay by motor is no easy matter, for the roads leading to it are but little used, so it lacked only a few minutes to midnight when the driver brought his car to a stop at the shore-end of the ramshackle pier, which Mahlin had described.

Inserting in the padlock the key he had obtained from Mahlin, Hope pushed open the door.

"Cleo," he called anxiously. "Cleo. Are you there? It's Hope."

But to his summons there was no answer. Cleo was gone. Suddenly Hook, who was advancing slowly with the match sheltered in his cupped palm, gave an exclamation and stopped dead. Had he taken another step he would have plunged through an open trap door in the floor of the storehouse into the waters of the bay, which gurgled and lapped the timbers of the pier only a few feet below. That someone had recently gone through that trapdoor was all too evident, for on the floor beside it, as though tossed there hastily, lay a woman's hat, a pair of high-heeled satin slippers, and an evening coat.

"Come," he said at last, pulling himself together. "We've no time to lose. He may have escaped already."

"Where we goin' now, lootenant?" asked Hook.

"Back to town," was the curt response, "to get that hell-hound Mahlin. He'll tell me what he's done with her or I'll kill him by inches."

"But hadn't we better take a look along the shore first?" urged the seaman. "She may've escaped."

"Not a chance," asserted Hope. "Besides there's no boat here, and there's no one to inquire of. There isn't a house within miles. Mahlin's either made away with her, or, what's more likely, he has her hidden somewhere else and left the clothes here as a blind. This time I'll get the truth out of him or he'll wish he'd never been born."

"A piece o' cord twisted around the thumb," observed Hook, "will make most anyone talk."

Dawn was breaking when the car again swung into Panuco street. Hope saw, with a shock, that an ambulance was backed up to the curb in front of No. 1121 and that around it stood several policemen and a small group of curious spectators.

1—Plunged Outward.
2—Cleo Made Prisoner in the Storehouse.
3—In Wild Excitement He Completed the Hidden Sentence.
4—It Did Everything He Claimed for It.

"What's the matter, officer?" he asked, leaping from the car and accosting one of the policemen.

"Murder, sir," he answered civilly. "I was passing the end of this street a few minutes ago when I heard a shot. A moment later a man came out of this house and ran down the street. I took after him, but he got away from me. Then I hurried back here. It was dark downstairs, but there was a light on the top floor. The door of the room at the head of the stairs was open and a man was lying on the floor. He'd been shot through the heart."

"What did he look like?" asked Hope, though he knew what the answer would be.

"A tall, thin fellow," replied the policeman. "He looked like a foreigner. But they're bringing him out now—you can see him for yourself."

The dead man was Mahlin—murdered, no doubt, in a quarrel with one of his associates in crime.

"This is a queer case," said another man, evidently a detective, who had just come out of the house, addressing the policeman with whom Hope had been talking. "I just found another dead man lying in the court, a Jap, I fancy. He must have fallen from the window of the room where you found the other fellow, for every bone in his body is broken. He's still holding a knife in his hand."

* * * * * * *

A month passed. To find Cleo—if, indeed, she were still alive—Hope had left no stone unturned. Aged and saddened by grief, he at last reluctantly abandoned the search as hopeless, and turned his attention once more to the submarine invention. Following the directions given on the paper in the cover of the book, he had no difficulty in locating the secret drawer which the old inventor had so ingeniously constructed beneath the glass tank of his working model. And in the drawer, in an oilskin envelope, was the formula. Acting under instructions from Washington, Hope had a new model constructed and installed in a modern, seagoing submarine which the government placed at his disposal for the purpose, and, a month after Cleo's disappearance, the submersible, having on board a commission of naval officers, left its moorings at the Mare island yard to submit Doctor Burke's invention to a final test. It was understood that if this test proved satisfactory the government would immediately take steps to acquire the rights to the invention.

On the same morning that the submersible was starting on its trial trip, Hook was strolling aimlessly along the water front of San Francisco. As he paused irresolutely at the entrance to his favorite saloon, an acquaintance, a former shipmate, who, upon leaving the navy had turned boatman, hailed him.

"You're just the man I wanted to see," he called. "I've got some news that may interest you."

"What kind o' news?" inquired Hook.

"'Bout that girl—Montgomery, her name wuz, wuzn't it? —that disappeared a while back. But it's only a rumor, mind you, and like as not there's nothin' in it."

"Yes, yes," exclaimed Hook anxiously; "go on."

"Yestidday," said the boatman, "I wuz over to Ignacio, on the north shore of San Pablo bay. While I was hangin' round the wharf, waitin' for my party, I heerd one o' the fishermen yarnin' 'bout a girl that's stayin' with a Greek fisherman and his wife down the shore a piece. This feller that was tellin' the story says he stopped at the Greek's place to buy some bait or something and he seed this girl. He said he reckoned she'd been mighty sick, she was so white and peaked lookin', but that she must've been a hum-dinger for looks when she was well. He tried to ask the Greek—Vlasto his name is—'bout her, but he don't understand much English. When he said she was a good-looker and had awful light-colored hair, it kind o' reminded me o' the description o' the Montgomery girl."

"'Tain't likely," said Hook pessimistically. "Ignacio must be all o' thirty miles from the place where Miss Cleo disappeared."

"Still," persisted the other, "she might of been picked up by a fisherman. Now and then the San Pablo boats works up Carquinez straits into Suisun bay. Besides, these Greeks is mostly an ignorant lot, and don't read the papers nor have much to do with the Americans."

"Waal," assented Hook, "it won't do no harm to run over to Ignacio and see this fellow Vlasto. We could get there in your boat in a couple of hours, couldn't we?"

"Sure," said the other, "and remember, Hook, that if it turns out to be the girl, I come in on the reward."

Upon reaching Ignacio, Hook ascertained, after considerable questioning, that there was indeed a Greek fisherman named Vlasto who lived with his wife in a small shack on the beach, several miles from the town. Landing at the rickety little wharf and crossing the strip of sandy beach on which nets were drying, he approached the miserable dwelling. The tiny doorstep was shaded by vines, and seated under them was a girl. A pale and pitifully wasted girl, but at sight of her Hook gave a shout of joy. It was Cleo. For a moment she stared at him as though he had been a stranger; then the light of recognition showed in her great, tired eyes, and, with a sob of relief and happiness she threw both arms around his neck, like a child who has been lost and found.

By dint of careful questioning he was able to gradually piece together the strange story of her disappearance. For twenty-four hours after Mahlin's departure she had waited, without food or water, for his return. At last the darkness, thirst and hunger had their effect on nerves already overstrained; her habitual coolness deserted her and she gave way to the hysteria of blind, unreasoning fear. During the long hours of her imprisonment she had discovered in the floor of the storehouse a trap-door, which had evidently been overlooked by Mahlin, and this she raised, intending to use it as a last resort. At last, when her highly strung nerves were at the breaking point, she heard a motor car stop at the end of the wharf and the sound of men rapidly approaching. Never pausing to think that they might be friends instead of enemies, and terrified at the thought that Mahlin was returning to carry out his unspoken threat, she hurriedly threw off her coat and hat, kicked off her slippers, and, lowering herself silently through the trap-door into the water, struck off in the darkness in what she supposed to be the direction of the shore. But she lost her bearings, her strength failed her, and, with a cry for help, she lost consciousness. When, after many days, she returned to a realization of things, she was in bed, evidently in a fisherman's hut, tended by an old Greek fisherman and his wife. The shock of her abduction, her fear of Mahlin and Satsuma, and her narrow escape from death by drowning, had resulted in a long and alarming nervous break-down, from which she was gradually recovering.

"I've got a boat out here, Miss Cleo," said Hook, when he had heard her story, "and I'm going to take you back to town."

And to this plan she had made no objection. Only once, indeed, did she ask a question.

"Jarvis?" she asked. "Is he well . . . has he missed me?"

"The lootenant's been almost crazy with grief, Miss Cleo," the old sailor answered simply. And with that she seemed content.

* * * * * * *

The official trial of Doctor Burke's invention had surpassed Hope's greatest expectations. It had done everything that he had claimed for it.

"We are entirely satisfied, Mr. Hope," the chairman of the commission had told him. "I shall wire the secretary of the navy tonight urging that steps be taken immediately to acquire the rights for the government. Once our submarines are fitted with this apparatus, our coasts and harbors will be virtually immune from attack."

And now, with the submarine running awash as it sped back to Mare island, Hope stood on the deck beside the conning tower, staring out across the water of the bay turned momentarily crimson by the setting sun. The secret of the submarine had been found at last. It had proved an unqualified success. The acceptance by the government was virtually assured. He had accomplished his mission and would doubtless receive commendation and promotion. But of what avail was it all now? With Cleo gone his success was not worth having. Tears blinded him at the thought of how, had she been alive, they would have rejoiced together.

So engrossed was he in his melancholy thoughts that he failed to observe the dingy power boat which ran alongside as the submarine slowed down to approach its moorings. Standing in the stern was Hook, waving his hat delightedly. He had evidently come out to offer congratulations. But, as the fishing boat came closer, he stepped aside and the young officer, looking down with staring, incredulous eyes, saw, seated in the stern amid a pile of pillows, a girl, white and fragile as a flower, who smiled up at him happily. For a moment he continued to stare as though his eyes deceived him. Then, with a great cry of love and happiness, he sprang to the deck of the fishing boat and gathered her into his arms.

THE END.

POLTIKAL EDDYTORIUL

The time has came when we persoom the Administrashion at Washington is purty anxshious to know whether the Bingville Boogle intends to support it for another term. In other words it is only fair to spose that President Wilson would feel a good eal more comfortabler if he only could feel shure that as Edditor & Prop. of the Bugle we was a going to fite tooth & nail for his re-eleckshion.

Then on tother hand theres Candydate Hughes. The chances is it would give him a good eal of satisfackshion if he only knowd whitch side of the fence we was on so he could make his campaign plans according in order to git hisself eleckted if possibil to the highest offis within the gift of the peepul.

Several of our most respeckted cittizens has asked us recent who the Bugle was a going to support for President and we repect that the time has came when the inhabitants of Bingville in partickler and the populashion of the country in general is waiting with baited breth, as we might say, to lern where the Bugle stands polotikal.

If you have follerd the eddytoriul polisy of the Bugle as close as you ort to of follerd it, you have probly notised that we have sort of layed back on our oars during President Wilson's administrashion. You have probly notised that we aint dicktated enny policies to President Wilson or offerd enny sujjestshions as to how the guvverment ort to be run. On the corntrary we have left all sitch crittycizms & sujjestshions to several of our most respeckted cittizens who colleckts every evg in Hen Weathersbys store and tells what they would do if they was president of the U. S. A. Some of em calkilates if they was president they would run things in this country a leetle mite different, but it is our unbiased opinyun that they would moren likely run it into the ground and up the spout.

As to who the Bugle will support at the approaching eleckshion will depend a good eal on circumstances. As we go to press our inflooence aint been solisited by either side and we desire to state in this conneckshion that we stand ready to be solisited and to talk bizness with either party. In other words we are open to enny propogishion whitch they see fit to put up to us and our eddytoriul inflooence & polisy will be largely determined by whitchever side considers it worth the most to em.

In short as editor of the Bugle we aint made up our mind as yet on this vital questshion. We are open to convickshion, but we cant deside sitch a turrible important step according to the dicktates of our own conshients until after we have conferd by mail or otherwise with the county organisashions and ascertain to whitch party the inflooence of the Bugle would be the biggest as repersented in dollars and cents.

Eph Higgins our accommodating P. M. of the Bingville P. O. is a good eal put out at the present writing owing to a misforchune whitch has happend to him.

Tother day there come in the mail from the co. seat a postal card for Mrs. Levina Wilkins. According to his reglar custom Eph laid it aside instid of putting it into Levinas box until sitch a time as he wouldnt be so bizzy but what he would have time to read what was on it.

Jest after the mail was changed who should come flouncing into the P. O. and ask for her mail but Levina herself. Eph told Levina there wassent nothink in her box whitch was the truth, but he diddent say nothink about the postal card for her whitch he had laid aside.

After a spell Eph tuk up the card with a burning curiossitty, to find out who was a writing to Levina and what about, but he couldnt seem to read the writing with his far sighted specks, so he walked all the way home for his near sighted ones but they wassent no better. The writing on the card was sitch a awful scrawl that Eph couldnt make out neither head nor tail of it nor even the name signed to it. Eph showed it to several of his P. O. patrons but nobuddy could read it. Finally word got around to Levina that Eph was holding back a postal card for her so she went to the offis maddern a wet hen and demanded it.

Eph give it to her and told Levina he was glad to git rid of it being as he had nearly sprained his eyesight tryin to read it but couldnt nor nobuddy else. Levina told Eph for two cents shed report him to the guvvernment for doing that. Eph told her to go ahead and report becuz if he lost the Bingville P. Mship he would consider it a blessing ruthern a calamitty.

Heck Palmer Spilt

Heck Palmer who lives 2 miles west of Bingville while driving into town last Friday with butter & eggs to exchange at Hen Weathersbys store for groceries & merchandise in his spring wagon met a old big he-ottymobeel on the road comin right for him at the rate of 60 miles a hour more or less.

Heck diddent haft to turn out being as his old mare Nelly done that for him. The road was narrer at this pint with a high bank on both sides and afore Heck knowd what had happend Nelly clim right up the bank whitch is steepern a roof spillin Heck, butter & eggs outen the back end of the waggin. Heck landed in the ditch beside the road on his head and shoulders whitch stund him some.

When he got on his feet Heck was mad as a hornet and grabd up a stone to throw at the feler in the ottymobeel who by that time was several miles further on. Then Heck looked up and there was his waggin hangin on the fence and Nelly nowhere in sight. She had jumpd clean outen the harness over the fence and struck acrost the field into the woods. It tuk Heck two hours to ketch her and when he got back to the road he found the waggin badly damaged, the butter melted and evry egg broke.

Heck says if he knowd who them fellers was in that ottoymobeel he wouldnt sue em for damages. He says that ruthern sue em for damages it would give him a good eal more satisfackshion to hunt em up and knock the stuffin outen both of em until they would haft to go on crutches for several wks to come. NEWS AND VIEWS OF THE FARMER

The Injuries Caused By This Insect, Are Often Overlooked Because of the Minute Size of the Pest—Simple Measures Recommended For Controlling It.

The clover leafhopper does far more damage than is usually realized. In a new publication of the United States Department of Agriculture (Farmers' Bulletin 737) by Edmund H. Gibson, it is stated that the loss from this cause to the clover and alfalfa hay crops of the country is frequently attributed to poor soil and climatic conditions. For this the minute size of the pest, which frequently enables it to escape observation, is largely responsible. As a matter of fact, continued attacks by the leafhopper, especially in some of the Central States, often result in the loss of a considerable percentage of a single cutting.

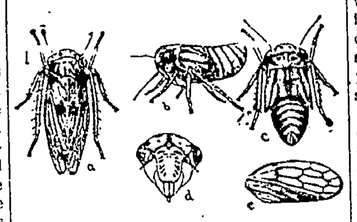
It is characteristic of leafhoppers to crowd together in great numbers, as many as 600 having been counted upon one plant. In feeding upon the plant the insects make tiny punctures. Around these the tissue gradually becomes yellow, the spots enlarging and becoming more pronounced until the leaflets ultimately curl up and the foliage wilts. The female also forces her eggs into the stem and leaf tissue, frequently causing a gall-like formation. Alfalfa, clover, cowpeas and vetch are among the principal plants attacked, but the pest is common in meadow and pasture lands and feeds on a number of cultivated as well as native grasses throughout practically the entire country.

The clover leafhopper is about 1-8 of an inch in length and half as wide, and is marked in a manner to distinguish it from many other kinds of leafhoppers that occur in fields of clover and alfalfa. The farmer will distinguish leafhoppers from other insects by their habit of jumping, their quick movements, and their minute size. In certain respects they resemble diminutive grasshoppers.

As the clover leafhopper spends the winter under clumps of grass, weeds and trash, the burning of rubbish and vegetation during winter months in waste places and along fence rows and roadsides will do much to prevent the pest attaining destructive numbers the following year. This precaution will destroy great numbers of other hibernating insects as well as the leafhoppers.

During the growing season close cutting or pasturing of grass lands is recommended. Cutting alfalfa crops from a week to ten days earlier than usual will often check the ravages of the insects and may be advisable when there is evidence that the leafhoppers are causing sufficient injury to justify the risk of loss through premature cutting.

Each year this leafhopper, by lessening the vitality of its food plants, occasions more or less damage over its entire range of distribution, causing a positive, although not easily estimated, decrease in the clover and alfalfa hay crops of the country. Continued attacks often result in the loss of a considerable percentage of a single cutting; especially is this true in some of the Central States. The leafhopper causes the greatest damage during the spring and early summer months, as the foliage is then most succulent and the tissues very tender, enabling even the immature leafhoppers readily to pierce the skin of leaf and stem and suck the juices. The incessant drain from concentrated attacks causes the clover plants to wither, and although they may not die, the new growth which is put forth is very apt to be thin and spindling. With alfalfa it is the first two crops which appear to suffer most. The drain upon alfalfa plants does not show as markedly as with clover, especially during a drought, since the alfalfa roots go deeper into the ground and the plant is better able to withstand adverse conditions.



The Clover Leafhopper: a, Adult; b, Nymph, Side View; c, Nymph, Dorsal View; d, Face; e, Elytron.

In many localities these leafhoppers are commonly known as "flies," but in reality they resemble flies only in having wings, and because they are about the size of many small flies seen in the fields. The adult or parent insects are light gray in color, but have numerous dark markings which give them a mottled appearance. They are about one-eighth of an inch in length and half as wide.

The manner in which they jump from plant to plant is much like that of grasshoppers.

The primary injury is produced by the direct feeding of the leafhoppers. The single tiny feeding puncture is itself inconsequential, and injury results only when a great number of leafhoppers attack the same plant.

The clover leafhopper is distributed generally throughout the United States, records showing its occurrence in every section of the country. Its range also includes southern Canada and Mexico.

The number of generations of the leafhopper produced annually in a given locality varies from year to year, depending on weather conditions, and it also varies in different latitudes and climates. For southern Missouri and northern Arkansas there are usually three distinct broods, covering approximately (1) April and May, (2) June and July, and (3) August and September. Farther south or under subtropical conditions it is probable that there are four or more.

In the Northern States the clover leafhopper hibernates in the adult stage, at the base of clumps of grass and weeds and under dried leaves and trash. Throughout the Central and Southern States it could hardly be said to hibernate; instead, the adults merely keep in hiding and under cover during cold weather, coming out on warm days to bask in the sun and feed upon such green foliage as can be found. In Missouri, for example, the adult insects have been observed feeding upon wheat during January and February, but not in any abundance. Nymphs cannot long survive cold weather, and it is not probable that eggs survive over winter. In the extreme Southwest, where conditions are radically different, the leafhopper is active throughout the entire year.

The adults are quick of movement and jump from plant to plant when disturbed. When strong winds prevail they remain in hiding, as they seem to dislike windy weather. Their most characteristic habit is that of congregating in great numbers on one plant, frequently to such an extent that they crowd one another. This is what causes the concentrated attacks in "spots" throughout a field. The clover leafhopper does not seem to seek shady or damp places, rather preferring the heat of the midday sun.

The nymphs are much less active than the adults and are not easily disturbed. When one brushes against the plants they cling fast to the stems and leaves instead of jumping to another plant. Like the adults, they have the habit of crowding together along a stem or upon a leaf.

For direct control the hopperdozer is recommended. Any form of this device that is suitable for grasshoppers will do for the clover leafhopper as well, but a much lighter and less expensive one can be made for the smaller insects by stretching canvas over a wooden frame. This can be made of such light weight that it will not injure the alfalfa and clover plants when it is pulled over a field. Two horses, one hitched at either end, are used for drawing it. On the inside of the canvas a thin coat of a sticky substance made of tree tanglefoot which has been thinned with cheap castor oil is spread with a paddle or shingle. As the leafhoppers and other insects alight on the surface of this substance they are held fast. Such substances as cheap sorghum have been tried in place of tree tanglefoot. The sorghum, however, dries out too quickly and frequent applications of it have to be made. It is best to draw the hopperdozer through the fields when the crop is about half grown.

It may be said that there are two main ways in which flytraps are valuable: (1) Catching flies which come to clean premises from other places which are insanitary and (2) capturing those flies which invariably escape in greater or less numbers the other means of destruction which may be practiced. Furthermore, the number of flies caught in traps serves as an index of the effectiveness of campaigns against breeding places.

The various species of flies which are commonly annoying about habitations or where foodstuffs are being prepared may be divided roughly into two classes: (1) Those which breed in animal matter, consisting mainly of the so-called "blowflies"; and (2) those which breed in vegetable as well as in animal matter. In the latter group the house fly is by far the most important. The stable fly is strictly a vegetable breeder, as are also certain other species which occasionally come into houses and may in rare cases contaminate foodstuffs. The stable fly, which breeds in manure or decaying vegetable matter, and the horn fly, which breeds in cow manure, are blood-sucking species and can be caught in ordinary flytraps in comparatively small numbers only. The kind of flies caught depends to a considerable extent on the material used for bait. In general the housefly and other species which breed in vegetable matter are attracted to vegetable substances while the blowflies will come most readily to animal matter.

This rule, of course, is not absolute, as flies are less restricted in feeding than in breeding habits, and, as is well known, the house fly is attracted to a greater or less extent to any moist material, especially if it has an odor.

The same general principle is involved in nearly all flytraps in use, though superficially they may appear quite different. The flies are attracted into a cage, as it were, by going through a passage the entrance of which is large and the exit small, so there is little chance of the flies, once in, finding their way out again. This principle is modified to fit different conditions.

HOW FLYTRAPS ARE MADE AND OPERATED

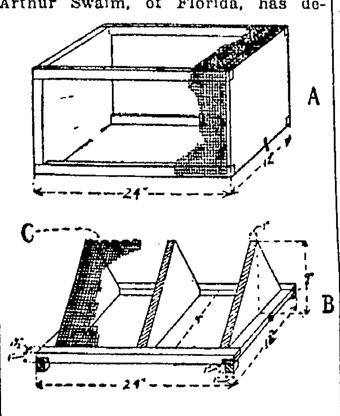
While Flytraps Have a Distinct Place in the Control of the Housefly, Their Use is, of Course, Only Supplementary to Other Methods of Control.

The attractant used to induce flies to enter traps may consist of (1) food, as in baited traps; (2) odors, as in window traps placed in windows from which odors are emitted; and (3) light, as in traps on manure boxes. Of course light is an important factor in the success of all traps, for, as is well known, flies have a marked tendency to go toward the light, and they usually enter the trap by flying toward the light after having been attracted beneath it by bait or after entering a room in search of food.

A number of traps of this general type are on the market, but most of these are of small size. Nearly all are constructed with a dome instead of a cone, and on this account the catching power is reduced about one-third. Moreover, the farmer, dairyman, or anyone with a few tools can construct traps at a small fraction of the sale price of ready-made ones.

Prof. C. F. Hodge has adapted the cone trap to use on the lids of garbage cans. A hole is cut in the lid of the can and a small balloon trap attached over the hole. Practically speaking the garbage forms a bait for this trap, and when inside the can the flies are attracted to the light admitted through the trap. It is really advisable to have the garbage cans fly proof, so as to prevent danger of fly breeding within them, rather than to depend on traps on the lids, which necessarily allow odors to escape.

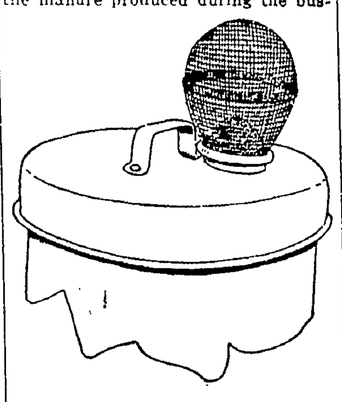
Manure pits or boxes are desirable for the temporary storage of manure, especially in towns and cities. These have been widely advocated, but the difficulty has been that manure often becomes infested before it is put into them, and flies frequently breed out before the boxes are emptied and often escape through the cracks. To obviate these difficulties a manure box or pit, with a modified tent trap or cone trap attached, is desirable. Mr. Arthur Swalm, of Florida, has devised a form of manure trap consisting of a series of screen tents with exit holes along the ridges of these, over which is a screen box. The latter retains the flies as they pass through the holes in the tents. The entire trap is removable.



Tent Flytrap. When the Trap Is Set Up the Screen Box, A, Fits on the Base, B, and Two Pans of Bait Are Placed Beneath the Tent. C, Hole in Screen at Apex of Tent.

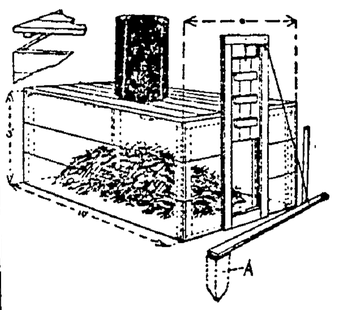
In order to retain the fertilizing value of manure to the greatest extent it is advisable to exclude the air from it as much as possible and to protect it from the leaching action of rains. This being the case, there is really no necessity for covering a large portion of the top of the box with a trap, but merely to have holes large enough to attract flies to the light, and cover these holes with ordinary conical traps, with the legs cut off, so the bottom of the trap will fit closely to the box. The same arrangement can be made where manure is kept in a pit. In large bins two or more holes covered with traps should be provided for the escape of the flies.

Manure boxes should be used by all stock owners in towns and cities, and they are also adaptable to farms. The size of the manure bin should be governed by the individual needs, but for use on the farm it is desirable to make it large enough to hold all of the manure produced during the busiest season of the year. A box 14 feet long, 10 feet wide, and 4 feet deep will hold the manure produced by two horses during about five months. About 2 cubic feet of box space should be allowed for each horse per day. The bin should be made of concrete or heavy plank. When the latter is used the cracks should be battened to prevent the escape of flies. The bin may have a floor or it may be set in the ground several inches and the dirt closely banked around the outside. For the admission of the manure a good-sized door should be provided in either end of a large bin. A portion of the top should be made easily removable for convenience in emptying the box, or one entire end of the box may be hinged. On account of the danger of the door being left open through carelessness, it is advisable to arrange a lift door which can be opened by placing the foot on a treadle as the manure is shoveled in. The door should be heavy enough to close automatically when the treadle is released.



Top of Garbage Can with Small Balloon Flytrap Attached.

In many cases fly trapping has been rendered ineffectual by the fact that the traps were not properly cared for. In setting traps a location should be chosen where flies naturally congregate. This is usually on the sunny side of a building out of the wind. It is exceedingly important that the bait containers be kept well filled. This usually requires attention every other day. The bait pans should be washed out at rather frequent intervals. This gives a large catch and avoids the danger of flies breeding in the material used for bait. Further, it should be borne in mind that traps cannot be operated successfully throughout the season without emptying them. Where flies are abundant and the bait pans are properly attended to the traps should be emptied at weekly intervals. Where flies become piled high against the side of the cone the catching power of the trap is considerably reduced. The destruction of the flies is best accomplished by immersing the trap in hot water, or still better, where a tight barrel is at hand place a few live coals in a pan on the ground, scatter two tablespoonfuls of sulphur over them, place the trap over the coals, and turn the barrel over the trap. All of the flies will be rendered motionless in about five minutes. They may then be killed by using hot water, throwing them into a fire, or burying them.



Use of Flytrap in Connection with Manure Bin. A, Block of Wood Set in Ground to Which Lever Raising Door Is Hinged.

Sticky fly papers are of some value in destroying flies which have gained access to houses, but they have marked limitations and numerous objectionable features. For use out of doors, traps are much more effective and economical.

Dr. Crumbine, of the Kansas State Board of Health, gives the following method of preparing fly-paper:

"Take 2 pounds of rosin and 1 pint of castor oil, heat together until it looks like molasses. Take an ordinary paint brush and smear while hot on any kind of paper—an old newspaper is good—and place several about the room. A dozen of these may be made at a cost of 1 cent."

The charms of the pergola are manifold when adorned with vines and properly placed. All vines can be used for covering pergolas, but the wistaria is ideal for this purpose. The Virginia creeper and the trumpet vine are frequently used and, in fact, all strong growing vines.

Forest fires burned over not quite 300,000 acres of national forest land in 1915, according to official reports just compiled, or less than 2 acres per thousand. Out of a total of 6,324 fires, 346, or 5½ per cent, did damage to the amount of $100 or more.

The timber loss was 156,000,000 board feet, valued at $190,000. Although the season was regarded as one of unusual exposure, owing to delayed fall rains, the loss was materially below the average of the last five years. Over 87 per cent of this loss occurred in the States of Oregon, Washington and Idaho, while more than 72 per cent was in Oregon alone. Besides the timber loss, fires destroyed reproduction, or young tree growth, of an estimated value of $160,000, and $3,407 worth of forage. The loss per fire in 1915 was $60.41, which is $14.03 less than the five-year average, while the cost of fighting each fire was $20.83 less.

Lightning figures as the chief cause of forest fires in 1915, as it does in the average year. Twenty-eight and a half per cent of the fires were due to this cause. Campers caused 18 per cent, which is 2½ per cent higher than the average. Eleven per cent were caused by brush burning. Nearly 11 per cent were of incendiary origin. Railroads were responsible for nearly 9 per cent of the fires in 1915, as against 14½ per cent due to this cause in the average year. The causes of over 15 per cent were unknown. Lumbering operations caused less than 2 per cent.

SMALL TRACTOR IS GROWING IN FAVOR.

The farm tractor is generally a profitable implement if enough land is cultivated to use it economically. This is the opinion expressed by three-fourths of the two hundred tractor users in Illinois to investigators for the United States Department of Agriculture. About one-third of the men in this list increased the acreage, on an average 120 acres to the farm, after buying the tractors and finding that they did not have room to use them to the best advantage.

TEACHING THE COLT TO EAT.

Encourage the colt to eat early, preferably feeding crushed oats and bran in equal parts. Let him have alfalfa and clover hay as soon as he will eat it. Experience shows that a ration of corn and alfalfa gives better results than a ration of corn and timothy or prairie hay.

A Saving of Cow Feed

In feeding a cow from a pail more or less is lost. By fastening the pail to the cow, on the order that a nosebag is put onto horses, she cannot get her head from the pail—it cannot be upset, nor can the feed be scattered or slobbered. Bore a hole in each side of the pail and fasten the halter in such a way as to prevent accident.

FRESH VEGETABLES THE YEAR AROUND.

Greens, roasting ears, beans, peas and all the other farm grown vegetables can be canned as successfully as gooseberries if the directions given for canning by Miss Bab Bell and Miss Addie D. Root of the Agricultural Extension Service of the University of Missouri are followed. Extension Circular 9, describing the "cold pack" method of canning, has just been issued. This will be distributed free to Missouri housewives, the members of the Girls' Canning Clubs organized by the Agricultural Extension Service, and any others interested.

The "cold pack" method described in this circular is easy but sure. No failures will result if attempts are made to can the ordinary farm vegetables according to directions given in this circular.

GOOD STOCK ON THE INCREASE.

That the farmers are realizing the value of the purebred stallion is shown by the fact that the number of such horses registered has increased more than 50 per cent since 1910 and that the number of grade stallions registered has decreased more than 14 per cent in the same time.

"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches" was spoken more than a thousand years ago, but it is just as true today as it was then.

Homemade Shower Bath

A very simple, convenient and cheap arrangement for a homemade shower bath has been built by the members of a woman's home demonstration club in Covington, Va., and it is considered especially useful in homes where there are many children. This device was made by using a 2 or 4 gallon tin bucket. A hole was punched in the bottom and a piece of pipe about 1½ to 2 inches long soldered in the opening. A piece of rubber hose 4 to 6 feet long was attached to this and a sprayer from the watering can or a nozzle placed on the end. A rope was tied to the handle of the bucket and run through a staple which was driven in the joist beside the window sash, making a pulley by which the bucket could be raised or lowered to suit the convenience of the person taking the shower. A hook was placed below this staple so that the rope could be fastened to hold the bucket in place, and a clothespin used over the rubber tube to cut off the water. A large tin tub was placed underneath to stand in. Estimated cost of this convenience was as follows:

A 2-gallon tin bucket	$0.15
Medium-sized zinc bucket	.75
12 feet of rope	.07
Nozzle and rubber tubing	.65
Pulley	.10
Piece of piping	.10
Clothespin	.01
White paint	.15

VALUE OF HAIRY VETCH.

About ten years ago, on a piece of poor clay-loam soil at the North Carolina station, vetch was used in rotation with corn and cotton to build up productivity. The soil was in a run-down, humus-deficient condition and would produce only meager crops, as it tended to run together and cement after each rain.

Within five years, by the use of vetch in the rotation and the judicious application of commercial fertilizers, the productivity of the land was increased more than 200 per cent, and the soil was brought to a loose and friable condition. The vetch was sown each fall after the corn or cotton and plowed into the soil during the following spring after it had about completed its growth.

One acre of corn harvested by hogs will return a greater profit than an equal area harvested in the usual way.

See any sawdust on the peach-trees near the ground? Borers! Get after them with a sharp wire, or they will destroy the tree in a year or two.

Wheat For Hogs

By L. A. WEAVER.

Information of value to pork-producers, especially in seasons when the corn crop is short, has been obtained by carrying on experimental work with other crops grown on the farm by the Missouri Agricultural Experiment Station. By conducting feeding trials with wheat it has been shown that under some conditions wheat may well be used for hog feeding instead of corn. Results obtained show that when corn is worth 70 cents or more a bushel, wheat may be profitably substituted for corn if the wheat is worth 90 cents or less. Likewise if corn is worth 80 cents per bushel, wheat is worth $1.03 a bushel as hog feed.

It has been further shown that pork may be produced more cheaply by adding a small amount of tankage to a mixture of corn and wheat than by feeding these feeds without such a supplement.

For example, the cost of producing 100 pounds of pork with corn and tankage was 60 cents less than when corn alone was used. This would mean an additional profit to the producer of $100 or more on each carload of hogs fed.

Extensive tests have proven that tankage added to the feed increased the rate of gain and reduced the amount of grain required to produce a hundred pounds of gain. This increase in gain was much more pronounced, however, during the first 78 days of the 120-day feed than during the last 42 days. Results indicate that it would be profitable to supply tankage to fattening hogs for the entire feeding period when corn was used, but only for the first 78-day period when wheat was fed. While the addition of tankage to the wheat ration increased the rate of gain during the last 42 days of the 120-day feeding period, this increase was hardly enough to warrant the increase made in the price of the ration due to the addition of the tankage.

If there are any country women who are wasting their time envying their sisters in the city—don't do it. Such an attitude is out of date.

Keep Milk Sweet

It is no trick at all to keep milk sweet in cold weather. It may stay in the sun for half a day in December without any great damage, but in July and August it must be handled very carefully. Whether the milk or cream is intended for the table, the creamery or the milk market, it must be sweet if it is to bring the best price.

To keep milk sweet just two simple things must be very carefully looked after: (1) it must be cooled as completely and as quickly after milking as possible, and (2) absolute cleanliness of pails, cans and cows must be secured. If this is done, thunder storms will no longer sour the milk. The warm, damp weather which we have just before thunder storms really does tend to cause milk to sour if it has not been properly cared for.

This souring takes place because little invisible plants called bacteria get into it in dirt or by lurking in the corners and seams of poorly cleaned pails and cans. The remedy is plain. Keep the bacteria out by using seamless pails and cans and seeing that absolutely no dirt or dust gets into the milk in the stable or anywhere else.

Profits from milk will be greatly increased by a good supply and proper use of clean hot water and an ice-house or a good cold spring—Percy Werner, Jr.

FARM LANDS INCREASE IN VALUE.

The value of farm lands of the United States is estimated at $45.55 per acre, as compared with $40.85 a year ago, $40.31 two years ago, $38.10 three years ago, and $36.23 four years ago. The census reported the value of farm lands in 1910 as $32.40, and in 1900 as $15.57 per acre.

In recent years the value of farm lands has been increasing at the rate of about 5 per cent a year, or approximately $2 per acre per year. The exceptional increase of the past year may be explained partly by the reaction in the southern cotton States following a temporary depression last year, and partly by the stimulus given by the war to prices, particularly of grain.

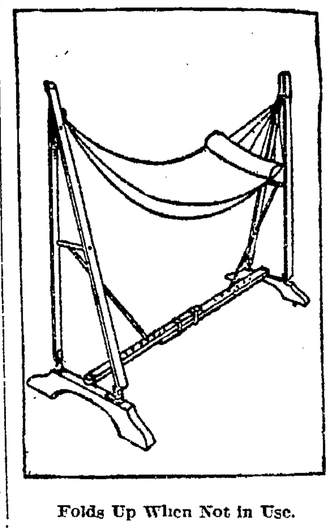
MANURE FOR CLOVER.

Barnyard manure applied to clover sod to be turned under the following spring has yielded an average return of $4.59 a ton in experiments at the Iowa Experiment Station. Applications on cover-mixed meadows left for hay have produced an annual return of $3.76 a ton at the Iowa station.

No dairy was ever too clean.

Support For Hammock

It is no longer necessary to have trees or a porch in order to swing a hammock. A Tennessee man has invented a hammock support which not only has all the advantages of the natural support but shade, but includes many virtues of its own. This contrivance consists of two bars, telescoping one on the other. At one end of each bar is a pedestal on which stand uprights, shaped like the letter "A." To the top of these uprights the hammock is swung. The advantages of this support are that the two ends can be moved as far apart or as close together is the telescoping bar will permit, and the uprights may be given any slant desired by means of brace rods, which fit into holes bored at intervals along the bottom. The whole thing can be taken apart and folded into a small space when not in use or can be put up in the house as well as outdoors. A canopy can be made to shield any person, using the hammock, from the sun.



Folds Up When Not in Use.

DON'T KEEP HENS OVER THREE YEARS OF AGE.

Unless you are raising a particular stock of chickens of which you have only a few hens, you cannot afford to keep the old hens as layers. A hen is not profitable after her third summer as a layer. Selling the old hens and using the incubator for hatching is the best plan for the small poultryman.

Rock and water gardens are coming into use quite generally now. Nearly all large estates and many smaller places have them.

Grafting to Insure Good Pear Trees

The first or second crop of fruit will show the quality, some which may be undesirable. Some varieties are predisposed to cracking, some to softening of the core, while others are knotty, and of poor quality—not as a general thing, but under present conditions.

From the varieties that are most desirable, those showing inferior qualities should be top-worked as follows:

Scatter the grafts through the tops—inserting so many that (each forming a small branch by itself) the whole taken together will make a full top in a few years.

Select six or eight of the main scaffolding limbs, and trim off the greater part of the side branches, but if the tree is a large one, only part of the top should be removed the first season (the remainder to be taken off the second year), and this part of the tree grafted. In these six or eight limbs there should be twenty-five or thirty grafts set.

Care should be exercised that the grafts are evenly distributed over the top, so that there will be a well balanced head of the new variety.

TO MAKE COCKROACH POWDER.

The cockroach is a hard insect to destroy and success usually results only from long, careful, persistent treatment with either one of the better powders sold on the market for that purpose or with a mixture of three parts of flour with one part of plaster of Paris. Set this dry mixture in a low, flat dish where the roaches can reach it and put a saucer of water beside it. Any roach that eats and drinks at these two dishes will cease to be troublesome. Powdered sweet chocolate mixed with equal parts of borax and scattered about cracks and crevices will also help to reduce cockroaches.—L. Haseman, Missouri College of Agriculture.

SCRUB SIRES DO NOT PAY.

Just recently two Utah ranchmen are reported to have sold their cattle on the same market on the same day. Both used the same amount of national forest range per head and paid the same grazing fee. One had used good bulls to produce his cattle, the other had not. The good cattle brought $40 per head more than the poor cattle.

Forgetting to salt the cows is a variation from the straight and narrow way that won't do if you expect to succeed with cows.

CHICAGO GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

Chicago, Aug. 26.—Yesterday's advance tempted further profit taking by wheat longs today. Opening prices were ¼c lower to ⅝c higher, but prices immediately sagged. September, which sold as high as $1.54¼ at the start, dropped to $1.52⅜. December, after opening at $1.55½ to $1.55, sold down to $1.52.
The close was weak, ⅞c to 2c under yesterday.
Light rains and the wheat weakness brought a fair volume of long corn early. December started unchanged to ⅛c higher at 75⅞c to 76c, declined to 75@75⅛c.
The close was easy, ⅛c to ⅜c down.
Commission houses were active on both sides of the oats market.
Purchases of December and January lard by eastern shorts gave a little flare to the provisions market at the start but the bulge was lost on profit taking. September pork opened 20c lower.

THE DAY ON WALL STREET.

New York, Aug. 26.—Extreme caution characterized the week-end session on the stock exchange, the greater tension in the railway labor dispute causing increased apprehension in speculative circles. Initial quotations were decidedly lower, extending to a point in leading rails and other investment issues, while coppers, minor industrials, Mexicans, motors and related specialties were affected in like manner. United States Steel lost almost a point but made full recovery, with a general hardening of prices in the final operations.
The closing was steady. Bonds were irregular.

Indiana Governor's Missive Inspiring to Troops on Mexican Border.

Llano Grande, Texas, Aug. 26.—Indiana soldiers do not doubt but what Governor Ralston's sympathetic interest has followed them to the Mexican border, and it was because they believe in his sincerity that they cheered his name to the echo Thursday night when a greeting from him was read at a meeting held in the Indiana camp Y. M. C. A. building.
General Lewis, commander of the Indiana brigade, presided and expressed his personal appreciation of the service the Y. M. C. A. is rendering to the soldiers in the camp. He read the governor's letter, which had been sent here in care of A. K. Jones of the Indianapolis Y. M. C. A. who has come here as one of the secretaries at the Indiana building.
Colonel Naftzger of the First Indiana, spoke also, making complimentary references to the governor, praising the Y. M. C. A. work for its service here and paying a tribute to the grit of the Indiana soldiers.

Letter From Governor.

The governor's letter follows:
"Mr. A. K. Jones, a representative of the Young Men's Christian association of Indianapolis, has been assigned to duty by the organization with the Indiana troops, now in the service of their country on the southern border. He is commissioned to bear to you the good wishes and greetings, not only of this organization, but of all the good people of Indiana. I have asked him to assure you of my continued interest as governor in the personal welfare of each of you. The people back home, I would have you know, are eagerly reading the accounts of your doings and of the conditions under which you are living. Judging from what one hears, by way of public expressions here at home, the people are more solicitous for your immediate welfare than they are for their own.
"You are rendering a public service for all the people of our beloved country. The honor and glory of the flag of our nation is very largely in your keeping at this critical period in our country's history, and in these bloodiest days since civilization planted the first torch in man's halting way.

Task Is Serious One.

"Your task is a serious one, but when it shall have been discharged by you, as it will be, it will endear you to and distinguish you in the minds of all right thinking people.
"In carrying the spirit of the Young Men's Christian association to you, it is the hope and ambition of Mr. Jones to lessen the severity of your privations and to aid in pushing forward the work of this world-wide organization. The association is always alert to assist those whose lives it touches. It wants to help you through the efforts of Mr. Jones. It wants to do this without cost to you, but with your hearty co-operation. It wants to bring to your view and your consideration the things that may help to make it easier for you to hold fast to the helpful and inspiring ideals of life. He will endeavor to do this in part by moving pictures and practical talks; by supplying you with magazines and newspapers; with writing material and game tables; with phonographs and other musical instruments, and by personal counsel and religious meetings.
"I hope that you may lay hold of him as he will lay hold of you, and that together you will labor and cooperate with one another in an endeavor to make life livable—make it enjoyable and noteworthy—while you are preparing yourselves under the stress of unusual conditions to hear and obey the orders of those in authority over you."

CAPTURES INTERSTATE TOURNEY.

St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 26.—Al Koyen, Fremont, Neb., won the preliminary handicap of the interstate association trap shooting tournament Friday, 97 out of 100.
The professional exhibition was won by Homer Clark, Alton, Ill., who broke 99 targets. Mrs. C. H. Topperwein gave an exhibition of fast shooting and broke 91.
Today is ladies' day. There is a special match between the women shooters of the east against the west.
The five high scores in the preliminary handicap were: Al Koyen, Fremont, Neb., 97; L. A. Rambo, Delong, Ill., 96; J. G. Gray, Bloomington, Ill., 95; O. C. Botger, Ollie, Iowa, 95; Del Miller, West Allis, Wis., 95.

GOSNELL BADLY HURT.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 26.—Curt Gosnell, the popular trainer, under whose care Single G has become one of the greatest pacers of all time, did not have the mount Friday behind Single G, when the pacer started in the free-for-all. Instead Gosnell is in a critical condition at St. Alexis' hospital and his physician refuses to state what chance Curt has of recovery, stating that it is impossible to tell how badly Gosnell is injured internally.
Gosnell, who is one of the hardest luck trainers in the country, and has been injured badly many times during his racing career, was injured yesterday while working the pacing mare, Hazel Armstrong. On the first Hazel hit herself, tangled up in her hopples and fell. When the mare went down Gosnell was thrown out, and, in addition to getting a terrible fall, was struck by the mare in her struggles to extricate herself from the mixup.

TEXAS HOLDING PRIMARY

Democratic Senatorial Nomination at Stake in Today's Contest.

Dallas, Texas, Aug. 26.—At least sixty per cent. of the voting strength of Texas, which numbers about 500,000, was expected to be polled today in the run off primary between Senator Charles A. Culbertson and former Governor Oscar B. Colquitt for the democratic United States senatorial nomination. These candidates received pluralities in the primary of July 22, Colquitt's lead over his nearest competitor being 31,000. The question of endorsement of the national democratic Mexican policy was one of the issues in the race. Former Governor Colquitt's exceptions to President Wilson's administration of Mexican affairs have been cited as evidence of his alleged discord with the present executive.

BABY BONDS TEACH BOY THRIFTY HABITS

A local business man, the father of a husky sixteen-year-old, whom he requires to spend the vacation months in working at the business which the parent expects to pass over to him in the future, states that he pays the son double the amount which he could be expected to receive for the same work outside of his father's establishment, but only on the condition that half of his salary be invested in Baby Bonds. In this manner the father expects to teach the son thrifty habits which, he says, will be of greater use to him in after life than anything else he could learn.

Baby Bonds come in $10 denominations. Bear six per cent. interest and are secured by first mortgages on local real estate. There are also a number of larger bonds in $500 denominations, which bear the same rate of interest and are secured in the same manner. For further details regarding either, see the Wildwood Sales company, Shoaff building.—Advertisement
